I ran it one day longer than any other show I have ever used and the gross was not great because of the weather but the fourth day—Tuesday—did more than any two Tuesdays have done for me this summer on such pictures. Pathé

The finest stars in the new art of talking pictures—an art demanding far greater talent than the silent drama—are grouped under the sterling, time-honored Pathé trade mark.

ANN HARDING stands out in a glorious blaze of popularity. Her melodious voice, winsome personality and exquisite beauty have captivated the nation. Her current dramatic triumph in "HOLIDAY" stands supreme.

CONSTANCE BENNETT has taken the country by storm. Her subtle dramatic artistry, enchanting personality, and liquid diction have established her name as a box office attraction of unsurpassed value.

HELEN TWELVETREES has registered a great dramatic achievement in the newest Pathé production, "HER MAN", now ready for a sensational premiere.

BILL BOYD an established star before the advent of sound, passed the acid test of talking picture technique with flying colors and remains a stellar light of splendid brilliance.

EDDIE QUILLAN is without a peer in the realm of feature comedies. His exhilarating youth is contagious. His manner of speaking humorous lines and his style in comedy situations are irresistible.

HARRY BANNISTER, ROBERT ARMSTRONG, and JAMES GLEASON are brilliant personalities from the speaking stage whose names have graced the lights of America's finest theatres. Their distinguished performances have thrilled countless thousands who now follow them in Pathé's feature productions. Then there is FRED SCOTT and RUSSEL GLEASON; both artists of magnetic prowess.

SWITCHING THE MOTOR AND THE GAS TANK

TIME was when a director of advertising in this industry would launch his campaign on a picture as soon as the Coast had dispatched reams of hooey that it fondly considered publicity, fit for all purposes, and a bunch of stills. Playdates were pressing and he had to rush the job. With this material to work with, he got busy and often had completed the task and forgotten it before he saw the picture. Then he would emit a series of yowls. If he had known that such and such a thing were in the production it would have given him great ammunition and altered his entire plans.

The heavy brains in the production end had not given him a thought. Their job was to turn out pictures; they had no time to bother with the advertising man's pleas for cooperation. But how they would raise hell with him if their names didn't get the proper percentage in billings!

THE time changes to the present and the scene to the RKO home office. Because of the tremendous drawing power of Amos 'n' Andy the powers-that-be decided to star the radio team in a picture. It was a brilliant idea; a natural. But the nut would be terrific and in consequence the conferences held to discuss the matter of a vehicle and kindred problems were serious ones. The plans had to be air-tight and fool-proof.

Behind the scenes, however, a young man was devoting 24 hours a day to the problem. He wore out typewriter ribbons and pencils; the furrows on his brow threatened to become permanent.

BECAUSE he was a merchandising expert, he knew the value of the names he had to sell, and began to pound home that message to the business. Misgivings concerning the venture upon which the company had embarked were turned into enthusiasm by this copy. The studio's job now was to make a picture which would live up to the advance notices. A realization of this gave the entire production unit a mark to shoot at.

The spontaneity of the studio's enthusiasm was contagious, permeating the entire force not only on the Coast but throughout the whole organization, a good deal of whose future hung on the outcome.

AND now the tension has lifted, and the industry has seen a picture's course moulded by the merchandising treatment to which it was subjected—in advance of production. How many others not now doing so could benefit by the use of the available merchandising brains of their advertising force in incorporating real selling angles into pictures before and while they are being made.

Give a hand to Hy Daab!

AN intimate check-up reveals a state of chaos regarding re-entry of the American industry into the foreign fields which were lost to a considerable extent with the innovation of talkers.

It develops that nearly every big company is nursing a pet plan of its own, with the majority differing to such a radical extent as to create an extremely unhealthy condition for the industry as a whole. A comparative few are proceeding along more or less intelligent lines. Some are at a standstill, while still others refuse to accept seriously the possibilities of building up business in non-English speaking countries.

Before talkers, foreign grosses represented a nice portion of the annual sales intake of most distributors. Now that the technical aspect of sound and foreign versions has clarified itself, some distributors once again are turning to lands across the Atlantic where they expect to stabilize business.

PROCEEDING on the theory that "injury to one is the concern of all," it strikes us as being sensible for all companies to organize their foreign managers into a round-table confab where intelligent discussion of the entire foreign problem will eventually establish the proper modus operandi. With this solution obtained, and a definite policy for re-entry adopted, the old shillalahs could again be lifted in the battle of competitive sales arguments.

This added revenue derived from markets which have been more or less dormant for two years would aid materially to boost earnings, spreading grosses over a wider area, thereby offering possibilities of slightly lower rentals all around. And the burdens of producer, distributor and exhibitor unquestionably would be lightened greatly.

Whitewash Charges Spur Department Of Justice to Push Film Prosecutions

Talker "Covered Wagon"

Hollywood—There's big dough in "The Big Trail." Practically all of the Fox production ingenuity was thrown behind the picture, but the results warrant the effort in time and money. Epic in sweep and concerning itself with the blaze-trailing that led to the settlement of Oregon, the picture has been built on a showmanship formula that can't miss.

You get majestic panoramas of covered wagons set in a mountain background, physical thrills, spectacle, comedy, love, villainy, hokum, and even an Indian attack on the wagon train. Grown-ups and children will go for it no end.

John Wayne, a newcomer, plays the lead. He has plenty to learn about acting, but has appearance, looks and physique. A lot of women are going to have a new crush after they see him.

Bar Poster Copy On 'Madam Satan'; Use Papers Only

Hollywood—Copy for billboard advertising on "Madam Satan" prepared by Fox West Coast has been rejected by posting companies, so the chain will concentrate on newspaper advertising. The results will be considered in the nature of a test and may cause a change of policy by the circuit. Fox Theatres some time ago abandoned billboard copy in the East.

When poster copy for "Madam Satan" was submitted request was made that it be modified. However, Frank Whitbeck, advertising and publicity director of the circuit, took the position that if the 24-sheet was wrong, then his whole campaign was all wet. Accordingly, he decided to use newspaper copy only to sell the picture.

Herr Hugenberg Takes A Licking at the Polls

Berlin—Speculation exists over possible influence of the Hugenberg defeat in the general election, in so far as Ufa is concerned. Hugenberg—the Adolph Zukor of Germany's film industry—owns the most powerful newspaper group in the country and is closely interested in the picture business through his Ufa company. Hugenberg's party—the National party—is said to have been "ruined" by loss of control in the Reichstag.

Dismissal of C. S. Harris Puzzle to Film Colony

Los Angeles—After 23 years of service to the RKO Orpheum theatres, C. S. Harris, manager of the RKO theatre here, has been let out. This sudden dismissal came as a surprise to both Harris and theatre people here and the reason is unaccounted for. RKO officials here would not make any statement regarding the change. R. Zeller, of Springfield, Ill., has taken over the management of the RKO.

Teeatres in Dis Town Play Up to Da Kids Pahlenty

Providence—It pays to be a kid in this town where youngsters can get in to see the best pictures for 10 cents. That price prevails in every show house in the downtown belt from 10 A. M. until 1 o'clock. Afternoons and evenings the price for children is 15 cents.

Exhibitors say they find the price cut effective in checking the growing tendency of kiddies to turn thumbs down on talkers. Dialogue seems to bore children under 14 who still retain their desire to see the western heroes shoot 'em up rather than talk about love under a soft spot on the sagebrush.

Discharged Usher Killed While Seeking Revenge

Chicago—Walter Bruchman, 17 years old, a former usher in the Fox Sheridan Theatre here, was shot and killed by Chicago police when he drew a revolver from his pocket when the officers stopped him for questioning. Before losing consciousness, Bruchman explained that he "had wanted to shoot Frank Riley, manager of the theatre." Riley discharged the youth several days ago.

Theatres and Equipment

Exhibitor members of the MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB this week discuss innumerable phases of theatre equipment and its relationship to successful operation of showhouses, as part of THE SHOWMAN section for Octoher, heginning on page 117, this issue.

In the current SHOWMAN, which starts on page 61, is also presented an unusually interesting array of feature material covering the entire theatre equipment field.

Congressional Inquiries and Independents' Squawks Bring Action

Washington—Vigorous prosecution of the pending cases against film distributors is planned by the Department of Justice. Spurred by threats of congressional investigations and the squawks of a number of independent exhibitors who charge that the various government actions have been whitewashed or are not being properly prosecuted, the department will concentrate on film cases, it is asserted.

No intimation of the new program is given in the official report of the department just made public. Four film cases brought by the government are in the courts and three others are awaiting trial. The report, covering the fiscal year which closed June 30, merely notes the names of the various cases and their status at the close of the year.

The so-called Paramount case, involving arbitration, which resulted in the Thacher decree, and the so-called First National case, involving the credit system which Thacher upheld, are awaiting argument before the Supreme Court, which is to hear the cases late this month.

The suits against Fox, involving the acquisition of Loew's, and the action against Warners, which followed purchase of First National, are pending in the New York Federal Court.

Two suits against Fox West Coast and one against Balaban & Katz are awaiting trial.

Injuns Make Hoopee, But's No Use, Western Agonizes

Providence — The RKO publicity boys here put over a neat tie-up with "The Santa Fe Trail" when they coaxed a real, live Indian tribe to exhibit the marriage ceremonies, war dance and peace pipe smoke marathon on the stage of the Albee. As an added gesture of good will and showmanship, the braves took Mayor James E. Dunne into the council, gave him a headdress and dubbed him "Big Elk." Stories and pictures cracked all the dailies with big plays.

Following the heavy newspaper breaks, the money takers at Albee's settled down to await the riot for ducats. It failed to materialize and the picture was turned out at the end of the week with a meagre $8,000 intake, rating 15% less than par.

Illness Causes Lapse of Del Rio's U. A. Contract

Hollywood—Due to her prolonged illness, Dolores Del Rio has been let out at United Artists. The star has passed the crisis in the serious illness which has kept her bedridden for the last six weeks. She will need another month, at least, for convalescence. It is probable that she will be signed again when work is resumed on "The Dove."

The Insiders' Outlook

ONE of the favorite sports of the film business is due for an unceremonious bump one of these days, judging by the frowns with which bankers have greeted check-ups on the amount of time certain big shots do not spend in the office.

Too many, some bankers feel, are absent from their desks for unwarranted periods. The national malady of last fall, known as following the ticker, put a crimp into many deals. Some of the executives were so busy playing the market that they couldn't find time to sell or show film. And the old bankroll told a glaring story.

The craze has subsided somewhat, but in the opinion of some financial moguls there is too much of the several hours for lunch, golf and take-a-day off tendency for the business' good. And they are prepared to put their foot down on the various practices complained of.

The Wall Street crash took a lot of energy that should have been put into the picture business, and it may be depended upon that safeguards will be sought to prevent a recurrence.

Beau Geste

It was a nice gesture that S. L. (Roxy) Rothafel made to his old-time friend, Carl Laemmle, just before Roxy sailed for Europe. Roxy, it is said, is not returning to the big Broadway theatre which he sponsored. Roxy had bought "A Lady Surrenders," but bookings made it impossible for him to date it before November. Universal wanted to get the picture out in general release as soon as possible, for it's one of the first salvos in the company"s promised big gun program for the year. Paramount wanted the picture, so Roxy consented to a substitution. Incidentally, it's the first Universal picture to play the Paramount, New York, in four years.

Those Hens Know Home

You probably know him, big executive that he used to be, who this week sat in the outer office of a second string distributing company, hoping that a $16-a-week office boy would carry his message to Garcia, the big sales boss inside.

Only a few short weeks back this job seeker was sitting on top o' the world with a big company. Now he can be seen almost daily running from door to door, literally begging for a place to hang his hat.

When he was in the dough he tried to be ritzy and to establish a rep for being hard-boiled—and the chickens have come home to roost.

Back to Its Last

Universal has started the season off auspiciously with "All Quiet on the Western Front" and "A Lady Surrenders." The pictures are the result of the company's changed policy and a credit and tribute to Carl Laemmle, Jr.

It's more than coincidence that the company is hitting its stride on the heels of its decision to withdraw gradually from the business of exhibition. Perhaps the dividing of energies during its theatre acquisition spree accounts for some of the red ink the company has been using. Now with the firm determined to concentrate on the business of picture making, the results should be gratifying.

Chiseling

About a dozen years ago a leading producer made a hit picture. Someone had a good memory on the story, for when an independent company a couple of years ago made one of its outstanding pictures certain episodes were so similar that a plagiarism suit was threatened.

Before suit could be instituted, however, the independent company purchased all film and talker rights to the original story for a few thousand dollars. The attorney in the matter did not realize the value of the story, which was one of a group on which he was commissioned to realize quick turnover at the best possible price.

With talkers clicking, the independent studio finds itself with a valuable property, easily worth ten times the amount paid for it to prevent the plagiarism suit.

Stymied

The publicity director of downtown theatres complained to a studio chief that the studio publicity man wasn't cooperating with him. Both were called in at the same time. The studio chief demanded specific charges. Downtown publicity man made three.

To the first two the chief said: "It is contrary to our policy to go into such nonsense and we don't care what other studios do."

The third charge was that the photographs of the studio were not as good as another studios, to which the studio chief replied: "I personally have seen all of the stills that leave the studio and I take off my hat to them. If our photographs are not as good as the other studios, why is it your boss selected our studio to have his own personal photographs taken here?"

Swinging the Axe

These are tough times for the minor employes of film concerns. Every company is giving them the gate—for the sole purpose of clipping off a few dollars here and there to meet a serious situation caused by bonehead decisions on the part of the higher-ups.

The stenographers and clerks are responsible for the junk turned out in Hollywood or the failure of the swelled heads in the sales departments—judging from the manner in which their heads are chopped off as soon as the receipts fall below normal. Meanwhile, the bigheads keep on parking their feet on their desks, dreaming of wine, women, song, golf or football.

And the guys who run the works forget the fact that if it were not for the privates in the ranks they would not be entitled to the job of general.

THE INSIDERS.

Independents' Veto Goes Into Waste Basket; Publix Dominates Meetings

Chicago—Plan of release and protection for the metropolitan area and downstate Illinois evolved by a committee of Chicago exchange managers and submitted last week brings distributor and exhibitor groups nearer to agreement than they have been at any time during three months of attempts to re-zone the territory. This, despite the fact that one organization, the Illinois Independent Theatre Owners' Association, and an individual, E. E. Alger, unofficial representative of down-state theatre owners, have rejected the proposal. A dozen individuals, representing all major local exchanges, circuits, chains and buying combines, "initialed" the plan to signify "tentative approval."

Despite the vetoes of the independent association and Alger, and disregarding the tactics employed to obtain the initialed approvals, against which criticism was early voiced, the plan submitted is destined to stand in all major considerations as the system of release and protection in the city and the state.

Independents' Objections

The objections of the independents are centered mainly on two minor clauses of the proposal—the regulation of double-featuring and the restriction of give-aways. A further objection is made by the independents to the proposed membership of the continuing zoning committee, provided for in the plan. This committee, to be composed of eight members, names four "affiliated" and four "unaffiliated" representatives. The independents contend that, whereas the "unaffiliated" individuals may be so theoretically one, and possibly two, of them are by experience and inclination of "affiliated" sympathies. This fact, they state, reduces their representation in practice to a 6-2 ratio, or at best one of 5-3.

On the basis of these objections, and also because he is restricted from taking action without the authority of a governing board, Aaron Saperstein, president of the Illinois independents' association, refused to initial the proposal when it was submitted. The board of directors of the association subsequently met and rejected the proposal.

What course the Film Board of Trade will now pursue in the matter is problematical. It is entirely likely that compromises will be made on the points of objection made

Synthetic Sport Promoters Hold Hallelujah Meet

Chicago—The big moguls who finance the little golf courses throughout the country gathered here this week for their first convention. There appeared to be a scarcity of trade problems. No mention was made, even, of any decline in the popularity of the game, so the moguls contented themselves with stories of success that would easily outdo any told at a gathering of the Isaak Walton League of America on the conclusion of a sensational angling season of the kind in which fifteen-pound trout are taken from road-side ditches with bent pins.

New York and Los Angeles delegates reported that the new miniature gold mine has theatre interests either trembling at their work or diverting huge sums from theatre working capital to get in on the new El Dorado.

"Three huge chains of theatres are buying courses for the lobbies of their theatres to combat the competition that Tom Thumb golf gives their entertainment," said a New York delegate.

"The moving picture magnates are scared," was a report brought all the way from Los Angeles. "They know the game is taking thousands from their regular income every day. There are 3,200 courses in Los Angeles county. One course in the city cost $500,000. Mary Pickford has just put in a course costing $50,000, and Dick Barthelmess has one costing $35,000. A movie thriller is about to be released with a miniature course for its background."

Box Car Figures

Statistics purporting to show that courses now established represent investments of anywhere from $18,000,000 to $125,000,000 and employ 160,000 people on 35,000 courses

Cleveland Sees Protection Now Closed Subject

Cleveland—Protection looks as though it has been settled in this territory, with the proposed schedules now in New York for ratification. They were adopted by the Ohio exhibitor unit committee, of which Martin Smith of Toledo is chairman, as submitted to the distributor committee, of which Al Merz is chairman.

Objections on clearance were rejected by Fred Desberg and W. J. Finney, representing Loew's; J. E. Firkness, representing RKO and by Publix.

tain terms that Eisenstein, now in Hollywood to make a picture for Paramount, should not have been granted a visa because he headed in Russia a school to disseminate Red propaganda through films. And his American film would undoubtedly develop along the same lines.

Finishing his vehement denunciation of Serge, Peas rolled over to his other pet aversion, "All Quiet on the Western Front," and told the sons of Uncle Sam that "All Quiet" was a perfect specimen of pacifist propaganda and should be tabooed from screens of the country, or something to that effect.

Representative Fish and his colleagues listened attentively to the Eisenstein knock, not knowing the latter, but when Peas laced into "All Quiet" they sat on him and heavily. Chairman Fish objected to the citation of this picture, saying he had enjoyed both the book and the film more than any other works in that field.

And, after that, Peas picked up his knife and went back to Hollywood.

Philanthropic

Chicago — Overheard at the local zoning meeting:

"You can't say that about Publix. Why, in this protection plan they're the only ones giving anything away."

"Sure," grunted a listener. "Who else had anything to give away?"

"Clara, Behave," Is Studio Advice

Hollywood—Clara Bow must keep her red head out of mischief hereafter and her name off the front pages—unless it's planted there by a bona fide press agent. This was the ultimatum delivered to Miss It by the Paramount studio chieftains as a result of her latest escapade in which she gave $13,900 in checks to cover losses at gambling and then stopped payment on them. It was admitted at the studio that Clara had been given some "friendly advice," but how hot a point was reached in the lecture was not learned. But she's got to "watch her step."

It was learned that her contract with Paramount, renewed Aug. 20, runs only to Oct. 11, 1931, and a year passes quickly. The star's attitude in the matter was demonstrated by her continued refusals to see reporters who would like to get some more hot copy from her.

were greeted with yawns from the delegates. A fair start, they admitted, but only a start.

Business discussions were confined to appropriate city ordinances to govern operation of the minnow courses. Delegates agreed there should be a license fee of approximately $50 annually, that 8 A. M. to 1 A. M. were reasonable operating hours and that children unaccompanied by parents should not be admitted to play after 10 P. M. The question of zoning courses against residential district invasion was sidetracked.

A southern delegate reported that he has just had published a book on how to be an expert at the game, a book which also includes all the rules and regulations of miniature golf so far approved. He anticipates a sale of several million copies and urged the brothers to get in on the ground floor.

Tales of prosperity were numerous and unrestrained. Miniature golf, the impression of an outsider is, has made more overnight millionaires than the war, the market of 1928-29 and prohibition combined. As one delegate put it: "It's simply a matter of putt and take."

And Now Mary Garden As Sound Film Recruit

Paris—Mary Garden will become a talker star if screen tests to be made on her return to New York prove successful, she said upon her arrival here from the Riviera. Her decision followed a reputed $1,000 trans-Atlantic telephone conversation. The offer involves a record-breaking salary, she says. She doesn't know in which operatic vehicle she will make her talker debut if the tests are successful. Sound films, she said, have reached such a state of perfection that they cannot be disregarded.

Hollywood—Constance Cummings, who came west to play opposite Ronald Colman and was dropped when Sam Goldwyn decided a new leading lady was needed to play the type he wanted, has been signed by Columbia for the feminine lead in "Criminal Code." ### ERPI President Hits "Bootleg" Equipments; 5,000 U. S. Installations

Electrical Research Products is operating on a controlled profit basis and economies effected in manufacture of sound reproducing equipment have been and will continue to be passed on to exhibitors.

This was the promise made Wednesday by John E. Otterson, president of Electrical Research, at an informal luncheon to members of the trade press. The company set a maximum profit of 20 per cent when it started in the theatre equipment business. At no time has its margin of profit exceeded that figure, and usually has been considerably less, the ERPI chief said. However, as rapidly as the cost of manufacture of equipment is lowered the price to theatres will be dropped proportionately, Otterson declared.

Hits "Bootleg" Equipment

Otterson hit "bootleg" equipments and said that one-half of the company's business now is in replacing unsatisfactory equipments. The company has nearly 5,000 installations out of the nation's possibilities, which he said total but 14,000. Credit to the extent of $20,000,000 has been extended to exhibitors, Otterson declared.

The ERPI president paid tribute to the speed with which producers and exhibitors "changed their business over night" to meet the demands of sound.

Hunter Invents Magnachrome for Wide Pictures

Hollywood—Magnachrome, wide film effect, which puts two images on one frame of standard film, giving a ratio of two to one, has been developed by C. Roy Hunter, Universal technical expert. The film has two instead of four sprocket holes on the frame. The shutter speed is increased from 90 to 180 feet per minute.

When the image is projected through the special lens it is twice as wide as it is high. Special film evidently is used as the grain is not apparent.

Orchestra of the Capitol also will return, to be augmented by 20 pieces, with stage shows to make their appearance Oct. 11. The agreement with the Capitol includes a cancellation clause with four weeks' notice. The Imperial is continuing without an orchestra and stage shows have been dropped permanently.

Wage scale of the Capitol provides for an increase, the new rate being $70 weekly. The strike dates back to Aug. 31 when the Capitol musicians refused to consider a new contract which included a cancellation clause with two weeks' notice. The other orchestras walked out in sympathy Oct. 11.

Renew Negotiations of Chicago Union Demands

Chicago—Consultations between Jack Miller, president of the Exhibitors' Association of Chicago, and Tom Maloy, business manager of the Chicago Operators' Union, on modification of the union's demand for two men in the sound booth were resumed here this week. Chicago exhibitors contend that only one man in the booth is required, and are seeking an adjustment with the union which will validate the reduction.

The consultations began in mid-summer, but were interrupted by Maloy's trip to London as one of the American delegates to the International Trades Unions' conference there.

Police Gathering More Evidence in Labor Fight

Hamilton, Ont.—As police are collecting additional evidence, W. P. Covert, third international vice-president of the stagehands' and operators' union, has been further remanded. He is charged with intimidation by Anthony Patzalek, proprietor of the Playhouse, following bombing of the Queen's theatre here.

Musicians Face Seattle Blowup

Seattle—Whether the symphony orchestra here was to have its season contract cancelled and be disbanded was being awaited following ultimatum to the musicians that they must abandon their position in refusing to rehearse because Conductor Carl Krueger employed a first 'celloist from another city.

The majority of the symphony musicians are employed regularly in local theatre orchestras and are attempting to invoke a rule that applies in all theatres, namely that out-of-town musicians cannot be employed while local musicians are available.

Sympathy Strike Looms in St. Louis

St. Louis—With threats heard of a sympathy strike of stagehands and operators, conferences are being held in an effort to break the deadlock in the musicians' strike here. The union is urging office workers to battle against overtime without pay, demanding shorter hours and time and one-half for extra work. Unemployment insurance also is provided for under the union's plan.

Terre Haute Gets Tough With Miniature Courses

It is required that order must be maintained at all times and that no radio may be operated on the courses after 11 at night. ## Tom Thumb Golf Hits Skids at Tampa, Fla.

Tampa, Fla.—That "tiny putter" golf is on the toboggan in this city is evident by the yelp of protest against a $50 a year license fee which was handed 'em by the city council last week, while theatres have to pass over five hundred berries each year to satisfy the state, county and city.

Further evidence of the way the straws are blowing showed up in the advertising of "The Hub," a neighborhood course which has been taken over by two girls, and who are operating the course FREE of charge to the public for the remaining ten days of the month.

Who the occupants of the theatre will be has not been announced, although it is believed that it will be either Fox or Paramount, with the former the most likely lessee because no further effort has been made by that circuit to erect its new house here, announced over a year ago.

The site is an ideal one with RKO's Palace-Orpheum directly across the street and Fox's Wisconsin, Milwaukee's largest theatre, diagonally across the street. George Uihlein, president of the realty company, has left for New York to close the deal with the eastern theatrical concern which will occupy the building.

No Scientifically Trained Operators

Neither Western Electric nor Electrical Research Products have at any time considered the replacement of projectionists with "highly trained operators with a scientific education," nor is any such plan under consideration, H. M. Wilcox, operating manager of Erpi, told Motion Picture News. Selection of projectionists, he pointed out, "is a matter for the theatre management and entirely outside of our jurisdiction."

"U" Negotiating $3,000,000 Deal In Sales Spurt

Continuing the sensational spurt launched at the start of the current season, Universal now is completing negotiations with one of the major circuits for a 10-year franchise for its product. The deal involves $3,000,000 annually.

The new deal follows closing of a practically 100 per cent booking arrangement for the 800 theatres of the Warner chain. This involves a reputed $3,500,000 for Carl Lammle's organization. Negotiations now are under way by Phil Reisman, general sales manager for bookings over the Publix circuit.

Phil Reisman

Earlier this season, a virtual blanket deal was closed for the RKO chain, involving an estimated $2,000,000. The Roxy deal and the booking of "A Lady Surrenders" into the Paramount, New York, were other sales achievements.

This contrasts with last year, when a deficit was reported. This season the company has adopted a new production policy of "specials only."

Tess Heraty Is Feted in Chicago

Chicago—Eighty representatives of Chicago film and theatre units gathered at a testimonial dinner at the Congress Hotel here this week in honor of "Tess" Heraty, secretary of the Exhibitors' Association of Chicago for the past eight years, and associated with motion picture interests here for several years prior to that. Miss Heraty becomes the bride of Edward Vincent Brady of Chicago on Oct. 18.

"Tess," as Miss Heraty is known throughout the motion picture industry here, is one of the most widely known and best informed figures in Chicago film business. Jack Miller, president of the Exhibitors' Association, says of her: "Tess preceded my administration in the Exhibitors' organization. When I came in, I fired her, but it didn't take long to learn that she knew more about the association than I did, so I was obliged to take her back again." Miss Heraty's first position in the film industry was with the Chicago office of Motion Picture News.

Ludwig Siegel, Chicago exhibitor, was in charge of arrangements for the testimonial dinner in honor of Miss Heraty.

Fox $2,000,000 Picture May Lead Way; Kid Clientele Chief Objective

Hollywood—Future of westerns may revolve around the way the public reacts to "The Big Trail," which opened at Grauman's Chinese Thursday night.

A number of production heads are known to have evidenced considerable interest in the Walsh picture, which, according to Fox studio officials, cost close to $2,000,000. Practically all of the major studios have diverted part of their schedules to westerns to meet the insistent demand of exhibitors and sales managers for talkers that will appeal and perhaps revive interest of children in pictures.

Just what trend "The Big Trail" may bring about depends on box-office figures. Some Hollywood dopesters incline to the belief that if the picture lands with a bang, it will close the door to others made along same lines and of equal magnitude. Others predict that "The Big Trail," if it does what the entire Fox lot believes it will do at the nation's theatres, will bring on big outdoor pictures built along road show lines from every major studio on the coast.

Westerns have been coming into popular favor ever since Fox clicked with "The Lone Star Ranger." That picture started a vogue of outdoor films, producers making the then startling discovery that sound photographed out of doors was superior to sound filmed in the studio. The demand of the public for action was met by westerns, with every major company scheduling a number of them on their 1930-31 line-ups. The kid angle is another feature in the return of westerns to popular favor.

If "The Big Trail" justifies its lavish expenditure, westerns will have passed their biggest test and this type of program will continue in the ascendancy during the new season.

Censors in Ohio Yield to Clamor; O.K. "Big House"

Cincinnati—The millennium for Ohio has finally arrived. Weeping, wailing and gnashing of teeth, which heretofore existed throughout Ohio in general and the industry in particular, have given way to rejoicing unrestrained. The Ohio Board of Censors at Columbus, which, less than two weeks ago, handed down what appeared to be a final decision that "The Big House" would not be passed for showing in Ohio, has undergone a change of heart, and the picture was released over the official signature of John L. Clifton, chief of the board, due, as Clifton expresses himself, to the extreme pressure which has been brought to bear from various sources, particularly the press.

The decision, however, is tempered with doubt as to the actual merits of the film, he said, and the board has definitely indicated that it acted under protest and contrary to its better judgment, but was influenced by insistent demand and the action of other states.

In lifting the ban, Clifton let it be known that the reversal of opinion was purely the result of what appeared to be a state-wide demand for the picture, although the board still entertained doubt in the matter.

Visions of packed houses at increased prices, due to advertising which the picture has received on account of the board's refusal to pass it, now fills the minds of Ohio exhibitors, who base their prediction on precedent, and who now hope to retrieve some of the losses which they have sustained during the ban.

Was Political Issue

The barring of the picture and its subsequent release brings back to memory "The Birth of a Nation," which was prohibited in Ohio several years ago by the late Governor Frank B. Willis, who subsequently released it with the result that capacity business at advanced prices continued to be the rule for many months. In that case, however, the action of the State authorities was not the basis of a serious political issue, as it has been in this instance.

In announcing the decision of the board, Director Clifton issued the following statement:

"'The Big House' was presented to the Ohio Board of Censors some months ago for censoring. The picture was held up at that time on account of a doubt in the minds of the board members as to the merits of the picture.

"Although that still exists to some extent, the board has come to the conclusion that, on account of what seems to be a state-wide demand for this picture which has arisen, it should take into consideration the will of the people and release the picture for showing in Ohio. This is in keeping with the action in other states.

"Therefore, the Board of Censors has reconsidered its action and has today approved 'The Big House.'"

The announcement of the lifting of the ban was greeted by prolonged cheering when made known at the Democratic rally at Marietta. Orators did not hesitate to announce promptly that they expected to comment plenty on the attempted suppression of the picture and its subsequent release under pressure.

Demand Federal Film Supervision At W.C.T.U. Meet

Delavan, Wis.—A petition was signed here by members of the W.C.T.U. in session at its fifty-seventh annual state convention, addressed to the House of Representatives and the United States Senate, requesting the enactment of a law for Federal supervision of motion pictures so as to establish higher moral standards of production.

It was stated in the petition that efforts to improve the morals of pictures through co-operation with the motion picture industry have failed, and the petition charges the producer with being mostly responsible for all "unwholesome and immorality in films." It calls attention to the fact that the hands of local exhibitors are tied because pictures are sold to them in "blocks," thus making personal selection almost impossible.

The petition further sets forth the stipulation that the Federal motion picture commission be safeguarded as far as possible from the danger of corruption through pressure from the industry and political sources.

San Antonio Company Charges Infringements of Disc Patent Rights

Legal seconds of Electrical Research Products and the Aleograph Company launched this week an extensive "training" campaign preparatory to a stiff battle over disc method of making and exhibiting talkers. The fight is all set for Nov. 3 at San Antonio, when ERPI will defend its disc title in a Federal Court suit which began in Texas some time ago. Western Electric filed an answer denying infringements of Aleograph patents, and the case was ordered to trial.

Further complicating the sound patents tangle, Aleograph seeks an injunction against further alleged infringements and asks for an accounting of profits derived by ERPI.

If the Aleograph Co. wins its suit, Motion Picture News learns, legal action will be brought in Canada, Germany, Australia and other countries where sound manufacturers use disc.

Martin J. Arnold, San Antonio attorney, assisted by Frank Steinle, heads the Aleograph legal battalion, while ERPI is represented by Brooks, Templeton & Matthews, San Antonio. The name of a prominent New York firm is linked with Aleograph, jumping into the case near the trial date.

In 1920, Allen Stowers, now living in New York, and Leo De Hymel invented the disc film which the Aleograph company claims is being infringed. A patent on this are interested in this company.
film was secured in 1924. Later on Stowers and De Hymel assigned their patents to Aleograph, receiving a certain amount of stock in return. Nearly 400 San Antonians

The Aleograph Company takes its name from the first names of the two inventors, Allen Stowers and Leo De Hymel. When they first tried out their idea, they used the crowing of a rooster as their subject. This achievement was the result of years of inventive effort on the part of the two San Antonio men.

Other officials of Aleograph are: John L. Pridgen, president; F. L. Toepperwein, second vice-president; James Knapp, treasurer, and the following directors: Nathan K. Tracey, Dr. W. D. Hicks and Dr. C. J. Boes.

De Hymel long ago disposed of his share in the company, but Stowers retains some of his stock.

It has been learned that the Aleograph Company hopes to recover approximately $20,000,000 from ERPI and about 40 other concerns alleged to be infringing on the patent.

"Tentative" Protection Plan in Force In Illinois, Despite Plenty of Squawks

by the independents, in as much as the re-zoning ambitions of the Hays' organization, not only here but throughout the country, were impelled by the necessity for equalizing the position of the independent. The Chicago Film Board, as was to be expected, approved the plan at a meeting held early this week. However, officials of the Hays unit refused to commit themselves on what probable action would be taken before the plan becomes effective. Opinion, however, indicated that no attempt would be made to railroad the plan over the veto of the independents. Compromise, partial or complete, on the points of independent objection will follow, it appears.

In the meantime, Paramount, M-G-M and Warner exchanges are already selling on the basis of the new plan. Their contracts, however, include a clause which states that later revisions of the release and protection schedules under which the contract was drawn will prevail over those incorporated in the contract. The same clause has been included in the contracts of all Hays' member exchanges here since selling was resumed after the first attempts at re-zoning.

Those who gave "tentative approval" to the plan by affixing their initials to the copy supplied them were: Max Balaban, James Coston, Emil Stern, Lou Reinheimer, Floyd Brockell, Bill Saul, Clyde Eckhardt, Norman Moray, Felix Mendelssohn, Roy Alexander and J. O. Kent.

Hit Pettijohn Stand

Among this group were several who later criticised the manner in which their signatures were obtained and the subsequent conduct of C. C. Pettijohn on his return to New York. The disgruntled ones, after reading trade paper accounts giving Pettijohn as their authority for stating that the plan had been definitely approved and settled, recalled that when their initials on the plan had been requested it was definitely stated that their signature was to indicate only "tentative approval" of the plan and was to be regarded in no way as a definite commitment. As has been stated, all representatives signed in this manner with the exception of Saperstein and Alger. Immediately the initials were on paper, Pettijohn gathered up the copies and departed with them for New York, while the meeting here continued. Then emanated from New York trade paper accounts of the "agreement" and "approval" of the plan.

As in the plan itself, so at the meeting, Publix was the dominant factor. Headed by Attorney Austin Keough, the Publix entry included Leo Spitz, Alex Halperin, Bill Saul, Max Balaban, Floyd Brockell, J. O. Kent (Paramount) and Emil Stern (Essaness). The Hays organization, too, was well represented. In addition to C. C. Pettijohn and Gabriel Hess, there was a bevy of Film Board secretaries from all over the country in attendance. Though the two ruling delegations were in accord on most matters, there were frequent occasions when the formidable Publix legal talent hurriedly and somewhat nervously shushed the Hays attorneys when they were about to speak their minds.

The essence of the plan is the principles which have dictated release and protection in the city and state for many years. Adjustments, naturally, have been made in cancerous situations downstate and wherever deemed advisable within the metropolitan area. These are of local significance only. So-called Publix "concessions" include the admittance of the RKO Loop theatres—Woods, State-Lake and Palace—to a hypothetical parity with the Balaban & Katz Loop houses; and the same elevation of Warners' Capitol and Avalon theatres to equality with the B. & K. southside neighborhood "pre-release 'A' theatres." Similar adjustments are made in the "pre-release 'B'" classifications. These revisions, however, are without importance, meaning only that in the event B. & K. theatres do not want a picture the others may have it at the time it would have played the B. & K. houses.

Two Weeks' Protection in Loop

Release schedules remain the same, with two weeks' protection for the Loop, three weeks for the pre-release "A" theatres, two for the pre-release "B," one for pre-release "C," and general release in the ninth week. Downstate schedules in all key centers likewise remain the same. Thus, B. & K. in the metropolitan area and Publix in the state retain their now historic autocracy.

Innovations in the plan include the regulation of double-featuring, restrictions on give-aways and the creation of a continuing zoning committee. Double-featuring has been permissible here in the first week of general release. It is now forbidden until the eighth week of general release. Give-aways, which include any means of procuring bargain admissions, will henceforth bring about an adjustment in the classification of the theatre sponsoring them.

The principles which have governed release and protection in the metropolitan area and the state have never existed in writing. This plan, when and if finally adopted, will constitute the first legal document of its kind in existence here.

Seek 25% Cut

Paramount Opens Philly Outlet to Standup Trade

Philadelphia—Keith's theatre opened Friday as the flagship of the Paramount invasion of Philadelphia and scored standup business for its first two days. The first picture development east of Broad Street in six years, its early success indicates that considerable business still exists in this section in spite of the westward trend, started by the Stanley theatre some ten years ago.

Anticipating the completion of the Pennsylvania Railroad station, at the present West Philadelphia station at 32nd Street, just 18 blocks west of Broad, and the erection of a new Federal and Post Office Building in the same neighborhood, various enterprises, headed by the theatrical interests, have started to expand westwardly. The Stanley at 19th and Market streets, the Boyd and the Aldine, at 19th and Chestnut streets, the Mastbaum, at 20th and Market, and the Erlanger (now back to the legit field after a season as RKO headquarters), have established a Rialto many blocks westward of the shopping district. None of these theatres has opportunity to cater to much "drop-in" trade, but by their concentration within a few blocks, they have proved to be a magnet for movie business.

Considerable interest is now aroused as to whether or not Keith's will recall this business back to the former center of theatrical activity. Located on Chestnut St., between 12th and 13th streets, Keith's shares with the Earle the position of being the only first-run movie house east of Broad street. In view of the fact that every department store, Wanamaker's, Snellenburg's, Lit's, Strawbridge & Clothier's and Gimbel's, are east of Broad street, and each is within two blocks of the theatre, good matinee business, at least, seems almost an assured thing. The estimated taking of the theatre for the first two days, with a scale from 35c to 75c, is $7,000. The opening film is "Animal Crackers," with a program of Paramount news and shorts on the bill.

The Moon Amusement Co., an A. R. Boyd enterprise, which has taken the lease for Paramount, but not materially altered the theatre. It was necessary, of course, to wire the house, with the Western Electric system being used. The lobby was repainted and the front of the house sandblasted. The interior had been refurnished by the Shuberts two years before and was in excellent condition so far as carpets and seats were concerned. A new screen was put in and the stage and various parts of the house were draped to aid the acoustics, which, for the purpose of vaudeville and stage shows, were always excellent.

When Keith's was first built, shortly after the turn of the century, it enjoyed the distinction of being the first "million dollar theatre" in the city. It enjoyed a prosperous career as the headquarters for Keith's two-a-day vaudeville up to about four years ago, when vaudeville in Philadelphia went into decline, with the competition of the talkers and the presentation bills in the first-run movie houses. The Shuberts acquired the theatre and for two seasons tried it as a legitimate theatre with indifferent success.

"Blue" Statutes In Philadelphia Under Hot Fire

Philadelphia—Councilman W. W. Roper's long-promised investigation of the "Blue Laws" situation as it affected Philadelphia landed first-page prominence.

Connie Mack, manager of the world champion Philadelphia Athletics, was on hand with a plea for Sunday baseball, while Philadelphia hotel men were loud in their plaints that the closed Sunday was bringing them face to face with ruin.

Maurice Lichtman, representing the Philadelphia Hotel Association and the Philadelphia Apartment Owners' Association, the West Philadelphia Progress Association and other business groups, asserted that "if Philadelphia doesn't make a week-end stay-over attractive, visitors in increasing numbers will be driven out and the hotels will have to close. Each year over a period of five years the patronage in Philadelphia hotels has been steadily decreasing, and in April, Philadelphia hotels had the loewst proportionate occupancy of any city in the United States."

The anomaly of building a $5,235,000 convention hall to attract thousands of visitors here with "closed Sunday" conditions was remarked by Councilman Roper in inaugurating the meeting.

Connie Mack urged that a referendum be placed before the people on the subject of Sunday baseball. Leo Schwartz, assistant corporation counsel to the police department of Boston, and W. S. Shelby, acting superintendent of police in Washington, were on hand to testify to open-Sunday conditions in their cities, and were loud in praise of the systems of open movies and open ball games in these two cities. They declared that the cause of prosperity was materially aided and that disorderly conduct had not in the least been manifested at the Sunday performances. Boston censors some pictures for Sunday showings and in Washington amusements are restricted in operation to the hours between 2 and 11 P. M.

Jay Dundas Joins Former Competitor in Far West

Rose City, Ore.—Jay Dundas, former Sioux Falls, S. D., showman, has purchased a half interest in the Roseway from his former Sioux Falls competitor, H. J. Updegraff, who has operated the house for several years. Dundas will manage the theatre, while Updegraff will devote his time to the projection room and miniature golf course operated by the theatre.

Butterfield Meeting

Detroit—The October meeting of W. S. Butterfield Theatres, Inc., and Butterfield Michigan Theatres Co., will be held in New York on Oct. 13. The new theatre being constructed in Ionia by the corporation will open about Jan. 15 and the old Orpheum at Bay City will reopen Oct. 9 as the Bay. It has been completely remodeled and now seats 1,200.

"Leathernecking" Low in Balto on A $6,600 Intake

Baltimore—Hot, sticky weather during the first five days of the week hurt business here considerably but patrons came out in force Saturday with the change to cool clear weather.

Loew's Parkway was the only house which did normal 100% business. "Follow Thru" was the attraction, with those Baltimore favorites, Nancy Carroll and Charles Buddy Rogers. The gross was figured at $4,400.

The highest gross for the week was done at Loew's Century with "Bright Lights" pulling in $16,650 which made this house rate 90%, while at Loew's Stanley, "The Bad Man," held up very well with the next high gross, figured at $15,000, giving this house a rating of 86%.

"Song O' My Heart," dropped heavily during its second week at the New Theatre, only doing 75%, or $7,500.

Even though the top admission at the Auditorium was $1, for the engagement of "Old English," the reported rating for the week was only 74%, giving this house a gross of about $4,884.

Of interest is the struggle to get and hold the family trade by the Hippodrome and the Palace where tabloid stock shows, with chorus and orchestra are on the program with talking pictures.

The Hippodrome reported a gross of $8,000, rating 80%, while the Palace was figured at $5,850, a rating of 65%.

Playing Safe

Hollywood—Clem Peoples, Los Angeles County jailer and noted student of crime, will serve as technical advisor on "Within the Law," Joan Crawford's next for M-G-M. It is reported that Peoples is meeting with a good reception from members of the cast, as they figure any calls they might make on him in the future will be bettered by a pleasant acquaintanceship.

Mpls. Femmes Go K-a-a-razy Over "Buddy"

Minneapolis—"Buddy" Rogers, the boy whose early music lessons paid him golden dividends when the talkies burst on the picture world, disrupted the theatre business here during the week with his personal appearance at the Minnesota. The youthful-faced six-footer set fire to the town's flappers and took them away from everything, including Rudy Vallee's radio program.

High school football was to open on Friday of the week and there would have been a woeful lack of feminine attendance if rain hadn't caused postponement of all the games. Girls dripped rivers of rain around the stage door hoping for a glimpse of the idol. High school papers sent delegations of from three to six breathless girl reporters for interviews and came near suffering casualties when the Rogers management cut down the delegations to one interviewer apiece.

Opening of the Minnesota University football season tore into the gate to some extent on Saturday but not enough to cost the 4,000-seated Minnesota any worries.

A near heat-wave, one good rain, some windstorms and an early frost featured the weather of the week which is typical of the struggle in which the elements ordinarily engage at this time of the year before going into the long, golden autumn that makes show business prosperous well up toward the holidays here.

"Jazz" Breaks Record at K. C.; Grosses $10,200

Kansas City—With the exception of the Uptown, a suburban first run theatre, Kansas City houses did not fare so well. "King of Jazz" broke all house records at the Uptown, shooting the rating up to 170% and taking in $10,200. Local patrons can't understand why the Paul Whiteman opus didn't get a downtown run. However, it didn't make much difference where it played for there were lines at the ticket window all week.

The Newman, which has been leading the parade of grosses for several weeks, took second place with "Let's Go Native," gathering in $14,800, rating 118%. "What a Widow" at the Midland did a little better than average, grossing $15,950, or 110%. Business at the Mainstreet was just so-so, making it an average week or $15,000 with "Danger Lights."

"Last of the Duanes" failed to give the Royal more than 100% on $5,000 for the week. The Pantages had the poorest week in many moons with "Once a Gentleman" and a good Fanchon & Marco stage show, "Cadets." But when the smoke cleared away, the coffers showed only $6,200, which means a rating of 62%.

Paul Whiteman And "Flesh"-Oh, What a 'Combo'

Cincinnati—Business, although not quite as heavy in some of the individual houses, nevertheless held up remarkably well, especially considering the opposition offered by the opening of one of the big legitimate houses, and also the opening of a dramatic stock company, both in the heart of the downtown theatre district.

The Albee, vaudefilm, as usual, led the field, turning in a gross of $28,000, which means a 127% rating. Paul Whiteman, playing an extended engagement with his band at one of the leading hotels here, appeared at the Albee Thursday evening to conduct the Curtiss-Wright Flying band, headline act, with result that the house was packed to the limit.

Ruth Chatterton in "Anybody's Woman," at the Palace, was high among the straight picture houses, the final count showing an intake of $20,100, or 144%.

Dee, Bucyrus, were the highest bidders, submitting an offer of $4,510. Although this figure is said to represent only a fraction of the real value of the property, present indications point to it being accepted, subject to confirmation by the court, which is expected in a few days.

"Whoopee" Opens At Montreal and Grosses $12,000

Montreal—With no sign of the return of the orchestras or vaudeville to the various main stem theatres, the musicians' strike situation locally steadied down during the week, patrons taking it for granted that a regular film fare would be served at the respective houses. ## Life of the Party

Chicago—A theatre manager, assigned by his chain to a house in the south side "black belt," was visited by a minor executive of the organization. The latter considered the visit to be something of a slumming trip, as was evidenced by his comments on the audience, the program and other incidentals. He wanted to rub pickaninnies' heads for good luck; engage comical negroes in conversation and, when a hot colored jazz band finally came on the stage he asked permission to take an instrument and play along with them, explaining that he, himself, had once been a musician.

The manager, naturally, dissuaded him.

"Well," commented the discouraged one, about to depart, "you've certainly got a queer looking audience here. I suppose they're plenty hard to handle sometimes."

"On the contrary," smiled the manager sadly, "our colored guests give us no trouble whatever."

Sills Picture On Cleveland Top with 105%

Cleveland — Business was not so good downtown during the week just ended, and the neighborhood houses report that there was almost no business at all. Diagnosticians are about at the end of their rope trying to explain why a good week is followed by a couple of bad weeks. One of the surprises of the week was the better-than-average business at the Allen theatre with Milton Sills' last picture, "The Sea Wolf."

"Animal Crackers" didn't click during its second week at the Stillman, and other first-runs failed to stir up much interest. The one exception to this condition was "Common Clay," which played a second-run engagement at Loew's Park to the biggest matinee business in eight months. ## Snaring Hubbies

Chicago—J. B. Smerlker, manager of B. & K.'s Covent Garden, convinced himself that neighborhood husbands were not doing the right thing by their wives. In consequence, he got the Midtown North Business Men's Association to back his plan for improving things. The plan, which is doing pretty well by itself, the theatre and the wives, was to get the neighborhood husband to bring his wife to the Covent Garden, buy one ticket and be admitted free himself.

"Love in Rough" Clicks Heavily Taking $20,000

Providence—Despite the hot spell, several country fairs and a George M. Cohan opening, exhibitors here did fine business for the week, attractions of exceptional calibre proving that fans will go to the movies when they are offered something they want to see.

Loew's State cracked $20,000 with "Love in the Rough," although comedy value of "Laurel-Hardy Murder Case" did plenty to pull 'em in as a side-show. "The Dawn Patrol," Paramount, likewise clicked into heavy dough with $15,000 for the week, while "Moby Dick," at the Majestic, was another over 100%, grossing better than $14,000.

What amazed exhibitors was the unusual success of "Africa Speaks," a Columbia product, which grossed $10,500 at the RKO-Victory. Dr. Paul L. Hoeffler, explorer who shot the film, made a personal appearance. The RKO Albee was down to $8,500 with "The Santa Fe Trail," despite fine publicity tie-ups.

McCormack, in 3d Week at 'Frisco Clicks $22,000

San Francisco—Business eased off considerably during the past week, although not at all houses. One reason for its not being so prosperous was because of Jewish holidays.

Another reason was due to cloudy days and miniature golf clubs. The people, however, always enjoy good pictures, and while the latter all did good business, those with poorer films were hurt.

Loew's Warfield did remarkable business for its third week with "Song of My Heart." Its gross was $22,000 and the rating 130%. Another good run was that of the "Sea Wolf," grossing $41,000 and rating 110%. Five other houses did 100% or over, and only three did less than 100%.

Grosses Go Up While Mercury Sinks in Philly

Philadelphia—The advent of cool weather toward the end of the week, after a particularly torrid summer, sent the grosses climbing in Philadelphia in spite of the lack of presentation bills owing to the musicians' strike. The strike threatens to grow into more serious proportions if not settled by Oct. 7, for the International Alliance of Theatre Employees has threatened to call out all operators and stage hands on that date.

Keith's opened its career as a Paramount house on Friday with "Animal Crackers" and grossed $7,000, or capacity business for its first two days. Saturday was patricularly big with the lobby crowded all day.

The Mastbaum reached another top notch gross with $48,000 for the week. Joe E. Brown, a Philadelphia favorite from his stage days, made a personal appearance, working without an orchestra. He appeared in a small play from over the orchestra pit, passing out gags and stories which the audience relished. With Gene Morgan as "straight man," he presented a hilarious "lunatic" skit. The picture was "Little Accident," exploited all over town for its spice angle and, like "The Office Wife" of two weeks ago, the sexy element dragged in a lot of extra trade.

"Girl of the Golden West" ran up $27,000 at the Boyd, a high mark which is directly traceable to Ann Harding's popularity after "Holiday." With Milton Sills' last picture, "The Sea Wolf," the Fox clicked along to $27,000, or 100% business. While the cause is hard to find, the Karlton took a new high for the summer season with $7,000 for "On Your Back." Picture received good notices, but hardly enough to account for jump of $2,000 over the average gross. House has a lot of "drop-in" trade and plentiful exploitation of a Laurel-Hardy comedy in the front may have helped things.

Estimated takings:

Wrong Target

They shoot too many pictures out in Hollywood and not enough actors, says Judge. And, in our opinion, some would-be humorists who write for the "funny" papers ought to face the firing line, also.

"Hell's Angels" Leading Boston; Grosses $16,200

Boston—Maintaining a rating of 150% establishes a new record for a road show in Boston, but that is what happened to "Hell's Angels" at the Tremont when it again crossed the $16,000 mark with a six days' showing. $65,000 in four weeks is traveling on all eight and the crowds appear to be in no danger of diminishing for some weeks to come.

George Arliss in "Old English" pushed up the Metropolitan gross to $42,000 for a rating of 130%, which is a gain of five per cent over the preceding week. "Madam Satan," at Loew's State, was good for $24,000, with a rating of 120%. "The Spoilers," at the Uptown, hit 125% with a gross of $15,000, plus $16,500 for 110% more at the Olympia.

Both Keith houses did good business with "He Knew Women," taking in $22,000, and "Africa Speaks" grossing $25,500. "Let's Go Native" brought in $16,500 at the Scollay Square.

Apparently the theatre season is going full blast just about two weeks ahead of schedule.

Bans Dog Racing

Fort Wayne, Ind.—Following the request of the prosecutor and sheriff here, the management of the Fort Wayne Speedway has consented to bring dog racing there to a close. Complaints received by the county officials concerning the attendant betting in connection with the races prompted the move.

Back to Adam

Broadway is getting an eyeful of old-time "hoke" showmanship in the painted footprints stenciled on the main street to plug Al Jolsnn's personal appearance at the Capitol. The "dogs" point the way to the theatre. It is reported that the press agent did his dirty work early in the morning, at about the time when half of Broadway was going to hed and the other half was thinking about it.

Billboards Out, But "Mme. Satan" Sins to 192% Tune

Los Angeles—Fox West Coast, giving billboards the go-by after the film's copy had been turned down by the billboard company, concentrated on newspaper copy to send "Madame Satan" over big at the Criterion. The house grabbed $19,200 for a rating of 192% on the first week of Cecil B. De Mille's new picture.

"The Office Wife" and "The Dawn Patrol" clicked in a big way for Warners' Downtown and Hollywood, while "Monte Carlo" at the Paramount proved to customers' liking. # Para.'s 'Native' Gets High Spot On $15,000 Take Seattle—Publix's Paramount kept up its winning streak for the seven days just concluded, topping all other local houses with a gross of $15,000 on "Let's Go Native," aided by the second week's appearances of George Dewey Washington as a stage attraction.

Second in the running came the Fox Fifth Avenue, with "Love in the Rough" clicking off $13,000 (100%) for a normal week. The only other winner of the week was "Moby Dick" at Hamrick's Music Box, which took in the neighborhood of $8,500 (130%) for its first week, and top others in rating.

"Song o' My Heart" in its second week at the Fox fell to $7,850, or about 80%. "Eyes of the World," at the Blue Mouse, failed to make much of an impression on local showgoers and took around $5,500 for the run. At the Coliseum, where an extended policy was inaugurated a few weeks ago with good business resulting, "Women Everywhere" was spotted in as a first-run attraction and took only about $2,000 for a rating of 65%. Consequently, "Song o' My Heart" goes in as an extended run attraction this week. The closing of Publix's Metropolitan apparently failed to receive any notice from film runs.

Santell to Make "Squadrons"

Hollywood—Alfred Santell's next directorial effort for Fox will be "Squadrons," a war story of the air, by Elliott White Springs, which was published under the title of "Big Eyes and Little Mouth." A romantic love story features the talker, which is being prepared for the screen by Jules Furthman.

Sunday School to Show Films

Tarpon Springs, Fla.—With the closing of the Royal here for the summer, this city is without a picture show, so the Greek community Sunday school decided to buy a machine and give the children a picture program each Sunday afternoon. No admission charge is made; but the parents are asked to contribute toward the film rentals.

Garbo Stuff

Chicago—While attending a Loop picture show one year ago, Emily Hay and her boy friend, Morris Dixton, boasted to friends that they could surpass in real life the amorous behavior of one Greta Garbo, to whose acting they were witnesses. The boast accepted, they found that marriage was necessary to carry on. Now, Emily, suing for divorce, charges that Morris's early warmth has changed to cruelty, and she wants "nut"?

"Song o' Heart" Takes Nosedive In Omaha Run

Omaha—Spotted to get big play from the sixth national Eucharistic congress in session here, John McCormack's "Song o' My Heart" (Fox) turned out to be the worst flop the Paramount has had in several months. When the smoke cleared away the house had only $5,950 in the sock, and that's a 70% week.

Money of the town went to "Three Faces East" (M-G-M), which netted the World $13,200, which is 20% over average. "Man Trouble" (W. B.) brought the State $2,873 for the last four days; 115% for the run. "Dough Boys" (M-G-M), first half, was good for a normal three days, getting $2,250.

Orpheum slipped to 95% with "Leathernecking" (Radio), grossing $15,200.

Book Sills Film In N. W.; "Unholy Three" a Success

Seattle—Decision to run Fox's "The Sea Wolf," starring Milton Sills, despite that star's recent death, in all first-run bookings throughout the Pacific Northwest territory was reached here this week. Fox West Coast Theatre officials conferred regarding the advisability of showing the film according to original schedules this month, or holding it over for a number of weeks until Sills' death had been forgotten to a greater extent.

It was decided that it would be run as originally booked in the Fox Fifth Avenue late in September, and then in other cities throughout the territory immediately. The decision was influenced to a great extent by the big business now being done in this territory on "The Unholy Three." That film, starring Lon Chaney, has been piling up big grosses at all second-run houses in this city, and in first runs throughout the territory, despite Chaney's passing some weeks ago.

High and Low On Music Row

NOW that the new season has rolled around with a promise of setting a faster sheet music selling pace, music publishers throughout the city have augmented their catalogues with new numbers. Songs like "Little White Lies," "So Beats My Heart for You," "You Brought a New Kind of Love" and "If I Had a Girl Like You" are of the type wanted, sales indicate. As we said before, with many of the publishers possessing many real good songs this year things sure do look a whole lot brighter.

Donaldson, Douglas & Gumble believe they have a fine running mate to "Little White Lies" in "Sweet Jennie Lee," also written by Walter Donaldson. "Love's Melody" is another tune sponsored by this house.

Sammy Wigler of DeSylva, Brown & Henderson is pepped up over the fact that a music store in southern California has made a window display of "Don't Tell Her What's Happened to Me" and has included the photographs of Buddy DeSylva, Lew Brown and Hay Henderson, the writers, and Danny Winkler, general manager of the firm. Meanwhile, a new song, written by Clarence Gaskill, "Still I Love Her," is making its bow.

Jack Robbins of Robbins Music Corp. is going across the big pond and will be accompanied by one of his writers, Jimmy McHugh. While abroad they are expected to make a tie-up with a European publisher.

Shapiro-Bernstein is publishing the entire score of "Leslie's Blackbirds of 1930," Will Morrissey's "Hot Rythm" and a list of tunes which include "Ro-Ro-Rollin' Along," "Moonlight on the Colorado," "Singin' Your Love Songs to Somebody Else," "Shadows in the Moonlight," "By All the Stars Above You" and "Too Bad." Jack Glogau showed us a letter from the firm's Los Angeles office wherein it stated that "Shadows in the Moonlight" is one of the most popular numbers on the Coast.

Harry Bloom, who in the short time as a publisher has had one hit in "My Heart Belongs to the Girl Who Belongs to Somebody Else," has taken a number, "Bad Girl" (You're Good Enough for Me), which several firms turned down as being "too daring." Harry Richman is doing it and the song looks like it will click.

Word reaches us from Red Star that Fox is pepped up over "Song of the Big Trail," theme song of the Fox production, "The Big Trail." The number is by Jimmy Hanley and Joseph McCarthy. "I'm in the Market for You" also is a brainchild of this team as is "Where Can You Be?" sung by Arthur Lake in "Cheer Up and Smile."

"The Stein Song" is ending, but the malady lingers on. It brought to the fore such songs as "I'd Like to Find the Guy Who Wrote the Stein Song," "The Mug Song," "To the Steins" and here is another entitled "Drink, Drink, Come, Brother, Drink," a German waltz which Edward B. Marks has imported to our prohibitioned shores. Well, maybe it will help.

PINCUS.

WILL HAYS having made the cinema safe from the bogey-man, what the same said cinema now needs is a social regisseur along the lines of the last of the mad McAllisters. Cinematic social events, at the moment, are not exactly pretty.

The particular functions which need attention very badly are the openings of important theatres, the openings of important films in two-a-day theatres and the entertainment of visiting stars.

True, each of the important film companies has on its staff one or two young men sufficiently well versed in the amenities of polite intercourse to know which knife to cut their peas with, but they lack the true spirit, the gay audacity of the authentic social bell-wether who should lead the shiny shirts and decollete of the photoplay to better and more enjoyable if not bigger and noisier things.

The opening of a new cinema shrine is necessarily a matter for extensive and loud trumpeting. Our plea is that the trumpeting should be a little less extensive and a little nearer the right pitch. If Old Hi-Ho-Humbug is not deceived, the invitation list at one of these monster galas contains the name of everybody in the telephone directory who is reputed to have a clean shirt. The house is so packed with well-washed nonentities that a celebrity of even the fourth magnitude stands out like a cauliflower nose.

There is usually a lot of clap-trap vaudeville in the lobby, the kind that would go very badly at a railway men's reunion. The ushers, the cunning things, are dressed to impersonate American marines or German spies or something equally provocative. The costumes, it need not be added, do not affect the wearers' adroitness in placing patrons in the wrong seats with a minimum of ceremony and delay.

Now comes the time to play "Guess Who's Here," or "Don't Look Now." In this interlude Otto H. Kahn is pointed out as Lewis Stone, Jesse L. Lasky as Leon Errol, and a mortgage broker named, oddly enough, Buchsbaum, as Harry Richman.

The speakers, usually chosen for their utter ignorance of the world of celluloid and tinsel, go into Chautauqua ecstasies about a lot of people who are merely names to them, names to be read off the pieces of paper they coyly cup in the palms of their hands for reference.

Now comes the big show. The star of the picture models a dress across the stage, her upper lip curled in memory of Barbara La Marr. She is so happy to be here, and hopes everybody will like the picture.

Then comes the lead, the character man, the comedy relief, the second assistant menace and the guy whose part was cut to a bit. They are so happy to be here.

At this point the attention-caller steps forth, pointing out that the proscenium in the New Sodom Theatre is the archest proscenium ever connived. He has a lot more uninteresting prose to declaim, after which the national anthem, the state anthem, the city anthem and the producer's anthem are played by a mammoth orchestra composed of paid-up union members.

The opening program begins. Everybody murmurs "Ah" and sinks into the pseudoplush. The picture is good or bad, according to luck. At any rate, two hours later, the members of the audience race through the cluttered lobby to their respective homes, sandwich grottoes and speakeasies. Another theatre has opened, another gag has been pulled.

The whole routine is listless and perfunctory. Practically none of the attendants writes in his dairy upon retiring "This has been a great, a historical evening."

Yet think what Ward McAllister could have done with, say, 3,000 people, a new theatre, unlimited money and three hours! Think, we say, and then write to somebody you think can do something quick and aggressive about it?—Cinema, New York.

WITH a parting shot Conway Tearle has shaken the dust of Hollywood from his feet.

Two or three years ago he was in steady demand and reputedly the highest paid leading man. Then, of a sudden, he seemed to cross the line that separated youth from maturity in the eyes of the movie makers.

Still virile and in the prime of life, he found employment harder to get each day. Now he's going back to his native England.

"I'm going back to a place," he said, "where age and experience are respected and one of my years isn't expected to lean on a cane.

"It's a detriment to have experience in Hollywood; they count youth of more value than skill in acting. If you learn your lines quickly and play with competent grasp they rush you through and pay you off.

"If you are lacking in training, but have youth, you stay on and on while they are rehearsing you. So we have the situation of the unskilled earning more than the skilled. On the stage it can't be so."—Syracuse, N. Y., Herald.

Stop Obscene Films! Revelations have been made of a new sort of racket, that which panders to a taste for filth in the making and projecting of obscene motion pictures.

From time to time references to this practice have been made. For a long time it has been generally known that such films existed and were shown. Parties of certain types often succeeded in getting them. The so-called "sophisticates" of New York took them to their penthouses and apartments and invited guests to witness the degrading photography.

But not until recently was it suspected that the making of these films had been organized to the point where it might be called a "racket." Now police . . . find stores of the objectionable celluloid. Arrests are made and the indications are that a comprehensive organization controls the making and distribution of this obscenity.

No argument is needed to prove the harmfulness of these films. The police are to be complimented upon their work in finding and seizing some of them.

It remains now for the prosecuting forces to make certain that justice is meted out and that further adventures into this damaging field of enterprise are heartily discouraged.—N. Y. Graphic.

Although I strive for perfection, there is no one in the world who realizes better than I that I still have much to attain. I do want to warn the young singer to beware of the charlatans who, perhaps in a degree sincere, yet none the less dangerous, ruin many promising voices with their theories.

If the dire effects of these theories were not so seriously disastrous to the voice, they would really be most decidedly humorous.

I have heard of a singing teacher who makes a pupil balance a glass of water on the top of her head, telling the pupil the tone is not perfect until not a drop of water spills and the tumbler remains motionless! Another teacher is said to make his pupils bend the body forward in order to take a high tone. If your teacher's ideas about singing do not appeal to your logic, I advise you to drop that instructor immediately.—Jeanette MacDonald in Screenland.

Ottawa—Nitro-cellulose film can be kept for 25 years when properly stored in unheated and ventilated vaults, Col. John A. Cooper, president of the M. P. A. S. Dickinson, fire prevention officer of the Hays organization; Eugene Crystal of Eastman Kodak; E. H. Woodsworth, Canadian Kodak Co., and Dr. A. E. McIntyre, chief chemist of the explosives branch of the department of mines, Ottawa, also took a leading part in the discussion of films.

GREAT questions confront us. They scream at us from headlines. They intrude on our lighter moments. They are always with us. Great burning questions. Disarmament. Prohibition. Foreign Relations Unemployment. The Stock Market. Television. Garbo.

But especially it's the real estate problem in Hollywood. The vacancy problem. The thrones for rent, titles for sale, crowns thrown in. Great, glittering thrones pushed into corners, covered with cobwebs. Scepters getting tarnished, gilt peeling off.

It's all the fault of the talkies. Old favorites are gone, new favorites unlabeled. In the old days of silence the fans knew where they were. They had a row of gilded thrones and occupants for each with nice clean faces and neatly brushed hair. And there it was and there we were and every one could sit back with a sigh and enjoy it all.

But now where are we? Ninety in the shade and getting hotter, if you must know. The talkies came along like any other great revolution and upset the old order and now we need a whole new set of candidates for the thrones. Pitched battles are still being fought and previewed over who shall be the "Great Lover" with the balance of power being threatened toward the diamonds in the rough. Our Orchid Lady has left and we need a new one of those. So it goes.

But the thing that is really agitating, making us hard to live with, is the Queen of Comedy question. Who shall be Queen Merry? No. Not who shall be Queen of the May—but Queen of the laughs, the chortles, the guffaws. —Screenland.

Hollywood wages war! Gnaded on by the stinging spur of rigid contracts, even the slimmest of movieland's celebrated stars are constantly trying to overcome the dreaded adversary of added pounds and comfortable, though unromantic, figures.—*Talking Screen.

THE whole of the trouble which has brought a rather unfortunate spirit into trade discussion during the past few months can be traced to one source—an appreciation on the part of the exhibitors that their revenue is not increasing in anything like a fair ratio to their expenditure.

Great jumps in both directions were registered when we first started wiring our houses; then, when more and more installations were completed, and the scarcity value and the novelty value faded together, it began to be obvious that things were not quite so well balanced as in the old days.

To a considerable extent, of course, the exhibitor who knew how to book kept his box-office receipts and his cheque to the renters in something like harmonious proportion, but there were a good many who were not too business-like in the way they let themselves in for big prices, and these were the first to feel the pressure.

Others waited and waited before they had sound equipment brought in, and refused to read the writing on the wall. When they did move, they found they were merely followers in a procession, the leaders of which had certainly secured the reward of their enterprise, exhausting the attractions of novelty as they advanced.

It is not unnatural, therefore, that there is a certain rather sharp flavor in the remarks of those exhibitors who are beginning to feel that their function is to collect the public's money and pass on all too big a proportion of it.

And it would be stranger still if they did not begin to question the wisdom which had led them to the hiring of expensive equipment and the acceptance of the present system of maintenance charges.

Their voices are beginning to be heard from different quarters, and the subject of their plaint has now crystallized into a definite feeling of dissatisfaction with the terms of their installation agreement.

It is obvious that, with more and more houses equipped, and more and more experience on the part of the operators who are responsible for running them, the original rate of payment for maintenance begins to show itself as no light burden.

Every week one hears of bad times, of inequitable terms, of hard deals. And, except for the natural vagaries of the entertainment profession, the subject-matter of every complaint seems to be the working out of agreements into which both sides presumably entered with open eyes. We cannot believe people sign contracts without first trying to weigh up their commitments.—Kinematograph Weekly, London.

Chicago Theatre Grosses Hit By Color Problem

Chicago — Chicago's "color" problem which in years past has caused plenty of consternation to south side theatre owners is rearing its head in new neighborhoods with the invasion of the near southwest and west sides by colored population.

First to feel its influence has been the Broadway Strand, in whose neighborhood the colored population has been on the increase for several years. In the past, the gentlemen of color—and their ladies—have been despatched to the balcony in this theatre. Recently, however, the climax which was threatened for some time was precipitated by the arrival in the neighborhood of colored families of means. These insisted on obtaining main floor seats, and when advised that they "would have to wait for them" one disgruntled personage wrote to Congressman Oscar De Priest, colored stormy petrel in the House of Representatives from the First Congressional District of Illinois. De Priest wrote Essaness Theatres, operators of the Broadway Strand, that further evidences of discrimination against colored patronage would result in investigations and possible law suits.

Since that time colored persons who wished were admitted to the main floor of the theatre, with the result that white patronage has been threatened. The problem presented in this instance is that the neighborhood, being only partly populated by colored persons, cannot support a house that is obliged to depend entirely on colored patronage, so a change-over of this nature is out of the question. Aggravating the situation is the possibility that, if enough of the colored patronage insist on main floor seating, the whites will eventually abandon the house entirely.

The Broadway Strand is situated on Roosevelt Road near Paulina St., the near southwest side. This neighborhood has been witnessing a colored invasion for the past several years. At present it has attained formidable proportions. The same is true of the near west side neighborhoods in the section bounded by Lake St. and Grand Ave., from Morgan west to Leavitt.

In consequence, the same problem with which the Broadway Strand is faced exists in greater or less degree for every theatre in the city's two new colored sections. These theatres include the Irving, Paulina, Madlin, Vista, Orpheus, Model and Hub.

Old Situation All Over Again

The same situation confronted south side theatre owners in years past when the colored population overflowed the hypothetical boundary at Thirty-ninth Street and moved southward, pressing the whites before it. The colored "boundary line" has now advanced to Fifty-fifth Street along South Parkway and Indiana Ave., and the intermediate territory. As this trend developed, managers were obliged eventually to convert houses lying in the path of the negro emigration into all-colored theatres, but not without temporary loss of important revenue and permanent loss of property value. Ultimately, in this densely-populated colored section, negro patronage was in sufficient volume to make the theatres pay, but during the period of the transformation of patronage it was not. Ascher Bros. were the greatest sufferers from south side colored expansion.

Today, owners of theatres in the path of the new colored migration are face to face with the same hazards.

Unemployment to Be Aided by W. E. Construction Plan

Chicago—C. L. Rice, vice-president in charge of the Western Electric Hawthorne plant, announces that if conditions prove favorable he will authorize construction of a new building for which the company has no use at this time in order to aid local prosperity and alleviate the unemployment situation.

Rice's statement is modified only by the executive's statement that "numerous reports have been received of prevailing low cost of building construction," and his admission that, although the company may not require the extra space at the moment, future needs will make it a necessity.

"The order for construction," says Rice, "will depend upon the cost of building now, as indicated by the bids submitted, as compared with the cost of construction at a later date when building conditions may be more nearly normal."

Sartorial Amos And Andy Refuse To Taxicab Home

Chicago—Not that Freeman Gosden or Charlie Correll left here in a state of shabby disarray, with stark hunger staring out of their eyes and a few loose and lonesome pieces of small change jingling in their pockets, or anything like that, but, somehow or other, they did seem vastly changed when they turned up here after a three months' Hollywood interlude.

The executive heads of the Fresh Air Taxi Co. alighted from their train looking like a couple of undergraduates from an investment broker's office. Light tan hats with that Prince-of-Wales brim, darker tan suits of Wilshire Boulevard cut and tan camel's hair top coats blended with tan faces and shoes to complete an ensemble that left any one unaccustomed to the street garb of the West Coast professional with a decidedly dark brown taste in his mental mouth.

Behind Amos came Mrs. Gosden with the five-months-old Virginia Marie, and behind her trailed Freeman, Jr. With Andy was Mrs. Correll.

The gist of the intelligence borne by the party was that they would remain in Chicago for a while before proceeding to New York to discuss the terms for a second Radio picture.

Both Amos and Andy demurred when some one suggested they taxi home. "Check and Double Check," their picture, they explained, has sated them with taxis for many a day to come.

"Why, a taxi cab," said Andy, "is the plot of that picture. It's also the development, denouement and the conclusion. Let's walk!"

"My Public too Rough," Says Jack

Chicago—Jack Oakie, spending a week at the Chicago Theatre, related that while he is grateful to his fans for the interest they have shown in him, he is just a trifle shy of personal contacts with them.

"One of 'em," the actor explained, "once soaked me on the top of the head with everything he had. While I was staggering around the fellow just smiled and said, 'I only wanted to see if you could take it'."

So, while Jack pleasantly and informally received interviewers backstage at the Chicago, his local admirers were balked at the stage door where they piled up three deep.

Jack said he preferred making pictures in the east because it's "more fun working in New York than on the Coast."

Putt and Fake Links in Windy City Skidding

Chicago—The minnow golf courses are beginning either to fold or take to cover, particularly in the outlying neighborhoods and suburbs where frost upon the pumpkin is first evidenced, boding chap for the hand that wields the putter. Twelve suburban courses went dark this week, while the night play everywhere is rapidly dropping off so far as the outdoor courses are concerned.

Indoor courses, however, are getting a healthy play, particularly those pretentious and bizarre affairs that have usurped ritzy Loop locations. Invasion of the neighborhoods by the indoor courses is slow and cautious, with the trend to locations where overhead is at a minimum. Vacant store space is housing most of them, but in total the number of indoor neighborhood courses is only about one-fifth the number of outdoor courses which were in operation at the summer's peak.

The new threat in the suburbs is the tendency to operate the courses under the same roof with a dance hall or "recreation" parlor, which is taken to indicate that their operators are wary of relying upon the winter revenue of the courses alone.

Delay "Danger Lights" Booking at State-Lake

The date for the opening with the Spoor equipment was originally set for Sept. 28.

RKO has also postponed the termination of its lease on the Woods, originally set for Oct. 1.

Manager Gets Rap for Gianinni Bank Fraud

San Francisco—Despite his attorney's plea that he be given a sanity test, William J. Casey, manager of a picture theatre, was sentenced to eight years in Federal prison by U. S. Judge Harold Louderback.

Casey pleaded guilty to defrauding the Daly City branch of the Bank of Italy of $14,000. With the help of two youthful bank employees, Garrett L. Callopy and George P. Marsh, Casey accumulated overdrafts to that amount, it was revealed.

The theatre manager promised the two boys to help them get stage jobs, it was said. Callopy was given a four-year prison term and Marsh two years' probation. William Klein, Casey's attorney, claimed the defendant was mentally irresponsible about money matters.

Showmen Sponsor New Operators' Union in 'Casey'

Kansas City—To combat demands of the regular operators' union, a new union of operators has been organized here, and a charter has been issued to the organization by the state. Sound Projectionists' Association is the name of the new group. It is composed of non-union operators and is not affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, but is maintained along similar lines, having a president, secretary, vice-president and business agent. It is supported by dues from its members.

The new association was formed to combat demands of the local union for what is asserted to be excessive wages and two men in the booth of sound houses, according to Denny Costello, owner of the Admiral, who helped to establish the new association.

The small theatre owner could not afford the union scale and requirements, it is asserted, and the new association was formed to furnish a way out, Costello told Motion Picture News.

The union demands two men in the booth, the first to get $55 a week and the second, $48. The new association rule calls for one man in the booth at $40 a week. If a second man is wanted, he will be hired as an apprentice at $22.50 per week.

Every independent theatre in the city is expected to hire members of the new association by Nov. 1, Costello says. Following are houses which have employed organization members: Westport, Baltis, Circle, Admiral, Palace, Lyric, World-In-Motion and Maple.

When firmly established, the new association will expand to include the entire Kansas City trade zone, according to Costello. Officers of the association are E. J. Lime, president; G. C. Blackman, vice-president; Charles Stein, secretary; Ed Costello, business agent.

British, German and French film producers were making considerable headway, asserted Major Ney.

The Davidson was acquired in May by the Klein Corp from Sherman Brown and has been dark for the greater part of the summer.

Ain't dat Sumpin?

Hollywood—They're telling a yarn about a disgruntled bit player who was complaining to a writer on the M-G-M lot. "Tell me one thing that Jack Gilbert's got that I haven't," he insisted.

General Strike Threat of Bands In Quaker City

Philadelphia—After two weeks of quiet on both fronts the musicians' strike in Philadelphia picture houses took a drastic step with the announcement from John Colaprete, president of Musicians' Local No. 77, that unless the strike was settled by Oct. 7, a general walkout of stagehands and operators would be called.

Notice to this effect has been served on the managers of Stanley-Warner and Fox theatres and a meeting was held Saturday when the managers submitted a plan of arbitration which embodied very few concessions over their original stand. A stormy meeting of the musicians was held at their headquarters later, with more than 500 men present. After a dozen ballots were needed to reach a decision, the musicians rejected all compromise proposals and announced that 200 stage hands and operators would be ready to walk out on Oct. 7. The sympathy strike has been ordered, the musicians claim, by an order from the International Alliance of Theatre Stage Employees.

The stagehands have been maintained on the payroll of the various theatres since the strike started, though they have been idle owing to the lack of stage shows. The operators have heretofore manifested very little interest in the squabble, and whether or not they will join the sympathy movement, in spite of the pressure from the International association, is problematical.

If the strike becomes general, there seems to be the general opinion that the legitimate theatres will be affected. Last year, the legit theatres and the musicians went into battle and the theatres remained dark until November, losing at least 10 weeks of the normal season. The picture houses at that time settled amicably with the musicians.

Claim Picket Ban Hurts Musicians' Case With Public

San Francisco—Superior Judge Percy V. King had under submission a petition seeking modification of the injunction recently granted to Nasser Brothers, theatre operators, against the musicians' union and others.

Check and Double Check

(RKO)

"Dis Am Sumpin'"

(Reviewed by Bill Crouch)

WITH draw names like Amos 'n' Andy, plus fine entertainment qualities, "Check and Double Check" should do big business in any theatre. The performance given by the blackface pair is exceptional in this, their initial film venture, which proves that the boys are capable of becoming screen favorites as well as radio idols.

This one is geared for all kinds of runs. It should prove especially attractive in the smaller cities and neighborhood houses. The talker offers unlimited exploitation angles and, with the daily radio plug adding to the name, should line them up at the box-office wherever it plays.

RKO, in making this picture, has closely watched the racial situation and is well protected against injuring the feeling of either blacks or whites. In only one scene are the two classes shown together, and then with no familiarity. Southern cities, where racial feeling may be pronounced, will find nothing in the picture to cause objection.

From a production standpoint, the picture is not above average. No lavish sets are used as these would undoubtedly not be in keeping with the story. A number of process shots are used and these are very well done.

The story deals with Amos 'n' Andy and the Fresh Air Taxicab Co., Incorpulated. The boys contract with Kingfish to haul Duke Ellington and his band to the Blair mansion. Here the lads met Charles Morton, son of their former employer. Morton is in love with Sue Carol, and were it not that he is unable to find the deed to some property, giving him his share of the family fortune, he would marry Sue. Morton believes the lost deed is in the old and deserted family home. He decides to search for it. Ralf Harolde hears of the plan and, being a suitor of Miss Carol's, decides it would be to his advantage to search for the deed first.

On the night of the search by Harolde, Amos 'n' Andy are delegated by the "Knights of the Mystic Sea" to visit the old house and find a paper marked "Check and Double Check." The boys enter the house after Harolde and his companion. They find the paper marked "Check and Double Check" and also the deed. When confronted by Harolde, they are asked to give up "the" paper and they give the "Check and Double Check" paper to him. Harolde, thinking he has the deed, leaves, as do the boys, who are very much frightened. The next day Morton searches the house, but fails to find the deed. Discouraged, he is all ready to leave by train when Amos 'n' Andy show up with the document.

Morton then marries Miss Carol and sends part of the wedding cake to the boys, who, on their way to visit Madam Queen and Ruby Taylor, fall and drop the cake—and the story ends.

This story, while rather slight, gives the lads a fine background for their comedy. They do not force any of the gags, and the laughs come naturally—and often. One noticeable thing about the acting is that none of the players tries to "steal" any scene. When one player is speaking the others give him his chance, and it is this attitude that helps the picture considerably.

The acting of both Amos 'n' Andy is at a par. Neither one outdoes the other, and the honors are even. Their voices are very good and the dialogue is clear—when the audience stops laughing long enough to hear it.

Kingfish is well portrayed by Russell Powell and he makes the character most interesting. The remainder of the cast, which includes Sue Carol, Charles Morton, Ralf Harolde, Irene Rich, Rita LaRoy and Edwin Martindel, is most satisfactory. Duke Ellington and his orchestra provide some tepid musical numbers and in great fashion. One song, "Three Little Words," is a potential hit.

Mel Brown's direction shows his ability at bringing out the natural humor supplied by Amos 'n' Andy, and he keeps the talker moving swiftly.

Father's Son

(First National)

Intensely Human

(Reviewed by Jack Grant)

HERE is a saga of boyhood that stands as one of the finest things of its kind since the talking era began. It is a real story of a real boy—so humanly told it almost hurts.

Seven years ago William Beaudine turned out a classic in Booth Tarkington's "Penrod and Sam." The following year, he repeated the trick with "Boy of Mine" by the same author and featuring the same youngster. Both were memorable successes.

In "Father's Son," Beaudine faced another similar assignment. The original story, "Old Fathers and Young Sons," came from Booth Tarkington's pen. Ben Alexander, since grown up, was replaced by Leon Janney, who will be remembered as the boy in "Courage."

Like all of Tarkington's kid stories, "Father's Son" is much of the Penrod formula. Containing very little plot construction, it is mainly a series of episodes. There is, however, a bit of propaganda concerning the possibility of misunderstandings arising when the father is old and the boy is young.

Lewis Stone believes his mere word should be law to his son, Leon Janney. Just a regular feller, Leon is heedless of corrections without meaning to be. His father punishes him by ordering him to stay in his own yard. But when the kid sees a tire drop off a passing junk dealer's wagon, he forgets the restriction to run out and return it. At the invitation to ride—and better yet to drive the horse—all memory of his father's orders vanish from mind.

The subsequent punishment is even more severe. Leon decides to run away. The neighborhood doctor finds him wandering in the woods and after discussing the matter "man to man," drives the sleepy kid home. Seeing that the father is contemplating stricter discipline, Leon's mother, Irene Rich, delivers her ultimatum. Either the boy's escapade is overlooked or they will both leave. The father is adamant.

Loneliness changes his viewpoint. He begins to realize the necessity of understanding his son's problems and ruling him with comradeship. Then the circus comes to town and Leon carries water for the elephants to earn a pass to take his friend, the doctor. It is the final straw. The father acknowledges his mistake and the last scene shows father, son and the doctor fishing together.

If the father in the story had known as much about real boys as Tarkington and Beaudine apparently do, there would have been a different yarn. Beaudine was just the man for the job of directing. With simplicity and finesse, he pictured this American family with a great humanness and appeal that cannot be denied.

In only two points can exception be taken to reality, though both may be possibly charged to dramatic license. Nevertheless, I do not believe any doctor would take a small boy into a patient's sick room or that any mother would not stop her son from juggling dinner plates. Minor criticism, but standing out like sore teeth in what otherwise would be near perfection of detail.

Irene Rich and Lewis Stone contribute their usual smooth performances and John Haliday is noteworthy as the doctor. But the laurels are usurped by the boy Leon Janney. He has none of the offensive mannerisms of the usual child actor and reads his lines like an old trouper.

Take note also of the litle colored boy, Robert Dandridge, playing Vestibule, a character reminiscent of Herman and Verman in the Penrod stories. Mickey Bennett likewise deserves mention.

"Father's Son" is not the best box office title in the world, but the picture will please everyone in the audience who has not forgotten their own childhood. For both kids and their parents it is a natural.

Scotland Yard

(Fox)

Good Audience Thriller

(Reviewed by Bill Crouch)

A CROOK melodrama in which Edmund Lowe plays a dual role, with the war, plastic surgery and plenty of love interest thrown in for good measure. That's the formula for "Scotland Yard."

This talker rises above the ordinary by dint of intelligent handling and playing. Whatever holes in plausibility appear in its plot are glossed over by the elements of mystery and suspense. It's audience stuff.

Dakin Barrolles (Edmund Lowe) in attempting to elude Scotland Yard detectives swims to the houseboat of Sir John Lasher (also Lowe). Sir John and his bride, Xandra (Joan Bennett), are forced at the point of a gun to shield the fugitive thief.

Barrolles is attracted by Xandra and when he leaves the following morning he takes a locket containing her picture. His safety from Scotland Yard is shortlived, however. Traced to his hiding place, he is forced to join the army in order to escape.

In France, Barrolles is badly wounded. He is taken to the hospital and there a plastic surgeon undertakes to restore his mutilated features. As a model, the doctor takes the photograph of Sir John Lasher contained in the locket with Xandra's picture.

Sir John has been reported missing in action. The presence in the hospital of Barrolles with the rebuilt face of Lasher brings the dead back to life. Xandra is notified and in the presence of Scotland Yard men who are still searching Barrolles, she is reunited with the man she believes her husband.

Hoping for an opportunity to escape, Barrolles returns to England with his "wife."

Opinions on Pictures

There he plans with his former partner (Donald Crisp) the robbery of the Lasher bank. But his growing love for Xandra makes the job distasteful. How he attempts to warn his confederate and finally gives himself up to Scotland Yard brings the story to a close with Xandra promising to wait for him.

Edmund Lowe gives a finished performance in his dual assignment. Joan Bennett is attractive as Xandra and the others are all capable. The direction of William K. Howard is notable.

Sinners' Holiday

(Reviewed by Sherwin A. Kane)

THE ingredients which have gone into the making of "Sinners' Holiday" are an old theme, a fairly modern application, and an able cast. The result is a good picture of the love and law affairs of those not too elegant personages who comprise the fast-disappearing world of the American carnival. The picture owes its tense and pathetic moments to a cast which renders convincing performances throughout, not a little of the credit for which is due to nicely balanced direction. Good individual performances are numerous, and they are particularly important to the picture as a whole, due to the fact that the gestures and "lingo" of types must carry conviction in this, or the picture is nothing.

"Ma" Delano and her family—Mary, Joe and Harry—conduct a penny arcade on an amusement pier over which "Mitch," a bootlegger doubling as a sideshow operator, wields an influential hand. "Angie," a barker for Mitch's sideshow, incurs the ill will of his employer when he intercepts a flirtation with Mary Delano. Angie's intentions toward Mary are both serious and honorable.

Harry Delano, "baby" of the family and his mother's particular favorite, becomes involved in Mitch's illicit liquor trade. When Mitch is picked up on suspicion by the police, Harry chisels in on his superior's operations, in the belief that the latter will be gone for a long time. Mitch, however, is released and, returning unexpectedly, discovers his subaltern's perfidy, with the result that Harry is "put on the spot." Mitch decides to do the job himself and accosts young Delano as he leaves his home on the amusement pier after it has closed down for the night. Already armed with a gun which he has taken from "Angie's" valise, Delano kills Mitch during their encounter.

Delano's sister Mary witnesses the killing from her bedroom window. Later, when the police investigation is in full swing, young Delano confesses to his mother and, cringing, asks her to help him. Mother love for her "haby" rules, and Ma Delano replaces the gun with which Mitch was shot in Angie's valise. Suspicion falls on Angie, whose own past has not been too clear, with the discovery of the gun. Angie is being led away by police when Mary, torn between love of her brother and love of her sweetheart, breaks down. She describes the murder and accuses her brother, who confesses.

All roles are capably and convincingly handled, with the portrayals of carnival types done with an accuracy and naturalness that is often missing in pictures of this kind. Discrimination and good judgment in casting are responsible. Grant Withers as Angie and Evelyn Knapp as Mary Delano click well together in this one.

"Sinners' Holiday" is better than average program fare, and should interest most audiences.

For the Love of Lil

(Columbia)

Pleasant

(Reviewed by Jack Grant)

BETTER than average program material, this little domestic comedy should please any audience. There is nothing heavy-weight about its treatment nor does it purport to carry any preachment. Designed only as entertainment, it achieves its purpose pleasantly.

Based upon the Leslie Thrasher magazine covers for Liberty, "For the Love of Lil" concerns the attempts of Sandy and Lil to stay happily married despite the kibitzing of their best friend, Wyn Huntley. A perpetual "Mr. Fixit," Wyn insists upon arranging their affairs to his personal satisfaction. He spends their wedding night with them, chooses and furnishes their apartment and invites a lot of his friends to the housewarming.

It is at this party that Sandy kicks over the traces. Under the impetus of a heavy and plentfully mixed drink, he breaks up housekeeping and Lil goes home to her mother. Wyn nearly kibitzes the pair into divorce and Sandy is just about to furnish grounds when Lil effects the reconciliation.

Trite as the story is in outline, it is breezily told and contains some genuinely amusing dialogue. James Tingling, in his direction, keeps things moving at light comedy tempo. Neat camera work aids in stimulating action.

There is every indication the picture was shot from a tight script, lap dissolves and fadeouts being more numerous than in the majority of recent releases. Two camera tricks in particular deserve mention. In one sequence we see Sandy and Lil walking toward the hotel room door. The camera starts a panorama shot of the action, speeds up for a few feet of indistinct movement and the couple are picked up strolling out on the sidewalk. The suggestion of descending by elevator to the street is there without wasted footage.

The other bit of tricky work that makes for fast tempo is when, after Sandy has smashed up things in his apartment, he stands viewing the wreckage saying, "Oh, dear—oh, dear." The voice is carried through the fadeout and in and Sandy is discovered, head in hands, sitting at his desk the following morning. The repetition of his words fit the hangover head he is nursing and the lapse of time is symbolized with no story interruptions.

As Sandy, Elliott Nugent delivers perhaps his best screen performance. He is perfectly at home in the sheep-like husband role and proves it. Jack Mulhall also gives good account of himself as the interfering friend. It is the most workmanlike job he has done in talkers.

Sally Starr garners as much from Lil as could be expected of the assignment and Margaret Livingston does the inevitable other woman with her usual charm.

In its tie-up with the well-known cover illustrations, "For the Love of Lil" offers moderate draw for the family neighborhood houses. While it may not please sophisticated patronage, it is pleasant in its unimportance.

Adios

(First National)

For the Ladies

(Reviewed by Jack Grant)

MOVING slowly, as befits its old California locale, this is not the sort of thing we have come to expect of Richard Barthelmess. He gives a sincere enough portrayal, but the limitations of his material will be apparent even to the lay mind.

Lacking pace, "Adios" should have had considerably more comedy. There are only a few mild chuckles in its entire footage. Depicting Los Angeles as the mushroom village of the days of the Dons brought a giggle or two from the local preview audience. These laughs will not be repeated elsewhere in the country.

Another disappointment is the failnre to catch the real beauty of old Spanish backgrounds and costumes. Spectacle might have relieved much of the languor of the story. Only in the final chase of the bandit and in the cattle drive is the photography noteworthy.

The subtitle introduction dates the tale as 1850, the time of California's admission to the Union. Barthelmess as a young Don, heir to a vast Spanish land grant, returns to his estate after his education in Mexico City. He finds himself classed as a "greaser" by American invaders of his native land. The reins of law and order are in alien hands, so Barthelmess turns bandit that he may even his score.

Donating the proceeds of his hold-ups to the missions, La Puma, the bandit, is in a fair way to become a Robin Hood. He forsakes his own love for Mary Astor to continue raiding the oppressers of his country. But when his sister, Marian Nixon, falls in love with the American, James Rennie, La Puma disperses his band to ride into Mexico. For a double happy ending, his sweetheart joins him.

Barthelmess has no particular climax to achieve and he suffers accordingly. Nor have Mary Astor and Marian Nixon anything to do but look their usual lovely selves. It is a thankless task being noble heroines in this.

The acting parts—such as they are—fall to Arthur Stone, Fred Kohler, Robert Edeson and Erville Alderson. They acquit themselves capitally.

"Adios" will probably be severely criticized in some quarters for its mixing of the Spanish "gracios, Senior" type of expression with distinctly American colloquialisms.

Whatever success "Adios" may attain at the box-office will be accomplished through feminine patronage. Play it with the women's angle in mind.

The Dancers

(Fox)

Pleasing

(Reviewed by Don Ashbough)

FOX has turned out a program picture in "The Dancers." It will satisfy the seeker of ordinary entertainment, but both Lois Moran and Phillips Holmes are too intelligent young players for such hackneyed material.

"I'll marry Irwin. I'd like to do him a dirty trick," reflects Miss Moran in this and somebody certainly did her a mean one when they cast her for the 'steenth time as a dance-mad hey-hey girl who consumes gallons and gallons of champagne in an effort to forget her unfaithfulness to a childhood sweetheart. Some day she may be given a chance to show the talent that glimmers through her performance.

Holmes as the lover, Tony, does his best bit when he becomes intoxicated at a night club and gets into a brawl. This situation comes about because once upon a time he and Diana, played by Miss Moran, promised that there would be no one else in their lives. He has remained true, resisting the advances of Maxine, a dance hall girl in the lumber camp where he works.

Back in Canada, Tony receives word that he is to enter the peerage through the death of an uncle and wires Diana to meet him upon his arrival in England. She refuses to answer because she has broken the vow, but a scheming relative cables and accepts for her.

After Diana's attempted avoidance, Tony gets drunk in the same club where Maxine, who has followed him, is doing an act. It is through Maxine that Diana and Tony are finally reconciled, Diana revealing that it is the latter's sudden wealth that caused her to turn him down. The final fadeout is in France where she has been teaching school, for no apparent reason.

The story is jerky and jumps back and forth between England and Canada with a speed that dazzles. The motivation is not always entirely clear.

Mae Clark does some good emoting in her role of Maxine. She is pursued throughout the picture by Tyrell Davis, playing the regulation silly-ass Englishman. Mrs. Patrick Campbell is well cast as the aunt. Walter Byron is the sleek Irwin who has designs on Diana and with whom Tony has his fight in the night club. He gives a smooth impersonation, the character being summed up in a remark by Diana, "I'd have been disappointed in you if you hadn't been somewhat of a cad." The audience felt the same way.

Office Wife

(Warners)

Great Box-Office

(Reviewed by Bill Crouch)

HERE'S a talker that has plenty of what's needed to bring customers to the theatre. In the larger cities this should do splendid business, and smaller theatres will find the picture has plenty of pull for them also. Good for popular priced week run spots and subsequent bookings. The title has plenty of drawing power and the picture warrants heavy exploitation.

Dorothy Mackaill, as the attractive office wife, does very good work, and Lewis Stone as the employer is excellent. To those who have read the novel the picture may not prove entirely satisfying as a number of changes have been made. The film story, however, is very well handled.

The whole thing concerns a business man whose secertary becomes a more important factor in his life than his wife. Lewis Stone, when he had an unattractive secretary—Dale Fuller—found his love interests outside his office, but when Dorothy Mackaill becomes his secretary he neglects the wife, Natalie Moorhead, who has her own lover and doesn't care anyway, and becomes vitally interested in Miss Mackaill, who returns the affection. Things are finally settled when Miss Moorhead seeks a Paris divorce and Stone and Mackaill plan to marry. Miss Mackaill makes one request—that she be allowed to choose the new secretary.

The picture is rather short in footage and many of the incidents that could have been enlarged upon are of necessity very brief. Lloyd Bacon has told the story in a straightforward fashion, and it has plenty of punch. Clever comedy scenes are injected throughout.

Joan Blondell, as the sister of Miss Mackaill, is outstanding and is due for bigger and better roles. Blanche Frederici plays an eccentric role well and Dale Fuller and Walter Merrill are ably cast.

The Boudoir Diplomat

Just Fair

(Reviewed by Bill Crouch)

"THE BOUDOIR DIPLOMAT" is a story of intrigues in the imaginary kingdom of Luvaria, by which the various leaders get what they want politically. The wives have a good deal of influence with department heads, ambassadors and ministers, so the wives are the center point of all diplomatic struggles.

Lawrence Grant, playing the ambassador, orders Ian Keith, his attache, to win the interest of Mary Duncan, the wife of the war minister, Lionel Belmore, who opposes a treaty Lawrence Grant very much wants signed. Ian Keith has done this sort of diplomatic work under orders before and complications arise due to the fact that Betty Compson is extremely jealous of every woman he meets. Betty, as the wife of Lawrence Grant, is responsible for getting Ian his appointment as attache. Ian is very much in love with and engaged to Jeanette Loff, who won't marry him until he proves worthy of her trust. Many narrow escapes from exposure and discovery of the personal intrigues are averted with a few humorous incidents. Keith does win Mary Duncan's interest and she persuades Lionel Belmore to agree to the signing of the treaty. For his work, Keith is given an appointment as ambassador to Peru and wins Jeanette as his wife.

The best performance of the cast was given by Andre Beranger, who plays the secretary to the attache. A little overdrawn possibly, but at least well played. Lawrence Grant also gave a good performance, but the rest of the cast were not up to their individual work. The film is not the type to interest the smaller houses and is not up to standard for the larger ones. As a screen story, "The Boudoir Diplomat" falls rather flat. The few moments that are amusing are lost in the many dull stretches.

Renegades

(Fox)

Strong Stuff; Tragic Ending

(Reviewed by Dick Crenshaw)

AS a picture of war, hate and suffering, this film stands out and in setting and theme strongly suggests "Beau Geste."

Warner Baxter is seen in a new role, that of the soldier, in "Renegades" and gives a good performance. The picture was well received in preview form and looks like good box-office.

The story is laid in Morocco and centers about a French fort commanded by the Foreign Legion. The type of fighting men that belong to the Legion and their intense patriotism form the theme of the story. Some fair battle sequences are to be seen in the picture, which features action and adventure.

As the loved and hated spy, Myrna Loy supplies the only feminine touch to the film, the story dealing mostly with hard living men who have come to the desert post to escape punishment in other countries. Her self-sacrifice in order to wreak vengeance on her former lover makes the picture rather depressing. The story ends as a tragedy when both leads die.

The story deals with Baxter's disgrace through his trust of a paid woman spy, his efforts to avenge himself and her attempt to do the same. The story becomes rather far-fetched when Baxter and three companions desert the Legion in Africa to start up a government among the desert tribes. Baxter has his former sweetheart kidnaped and gives her to the men of his camp. She persuades a desert chieftain to distrust Baxter, who realizes that he has become a despised renegade and, as a last token, gives his life to save the legionnaires from destruction when his own band attacks the fort. A good attraction for week stands and subsequent bookings.

Sit Tight

(Warners)

Surefire

(Reviewed by Jack Grant)

BUILT as a follow-up for "Hold Everything" and "Top Speed," this picture should have plenty of box-office draw. If its predecessors had 'em laughing, this one will make 'em roar.

Again the picture belongs to the team of Joe E. Brown and Winnie Lightner. The love interest of Claudia Dell and Paul Gregory is secondary, though it has some bearing on the plot motivation.

Due to a falling out with his sweetheart, Gregory resigns from his business affiliations and turns professional wrestler. Winnie Lightner owns a health farm and there Gregory trains for a championship match. Winnie becomes his manager, though her main job seems to be keeping Brown out of the numerous difficulties in which he becomes embroiled.

On the eve of the championship match Gregory is kidnaped by the father of his ex-fiancee. Faced with the necessity of stalling for time until Gregory can be found, Winnie convinces Joe he must go on in a semi-final match. The burlesque wrestling bout that ensues is unquestionably the picture's highlight. Few more hilarious sequences have ever been filmed.

Meanwhile Gregory effects his escape and turns up at the psychological moment to go in the ring, thereby saving the day.

If anything, a "championship" wrestling match is better thrill material on the screen than the more familiar prize fight finale. It has been nicely staged in this release and looks mighty real. Though the result may be predetermined by any smart audience, there is no denying it packs a punch.

Winnie Lightner has two song numbers in the course of the action. She sells both to good effect and otherwise acquits herself with honors.

From the first flash of Brown's pan, the gang is with him. His style of comedy remains unique in films and that wrestling travesty will leave them howling. Brown and Lightner are 99 44-100 per cent of "Sit Tight," so what remains to be said?

Divorce Among Friends

(Warners)

Good Domestic Comedy

(Reviewed by Don Ashbaugh)

ROY DEL RUTH shows the hand of a good director in this sadly misnamed domestic comedy. The picture has loads of entertainment and a title which doesn't mean a thing. The story is the same as has been done on stage and screen many hundreds of times—a young husband and wife, eternally quarreling, a vamp, another man and near divorce.

But Del Ruth, aided by a running fire of Arthur Ceasar's wisecracks, has made of it a clever, fast moving, lively litle picture which should satisfy almost any audience. There are no wars, gang fights, or songs in the picture. In fact, it is the plainest type of picture stuff done up in a neat package.

James Hall does some of the best work he has ever exhibited as the young husband who is prone to fall for every attractive girl who crosses his path. He is one of those husbands whom the audience loves to see punished. He leaves his room in a mess, strews clothes from here to there, can never find anything and is habitually scolding his wife because of his own shortcomings.

Irene Delroy is the patient wife. She handles the role capably and in a manner which wins the sympathy of both sexes viewing her troubles.

Natalie Moorhead scores as the vamp who is continually causing Hall trouble with his wife by making love to him in public. Jimmy has a hard time ducking her and one wonders just why he wants to after getting a few eyeloads of the pleasant blonde.

But the other three have to take a back seat to Lew Cody. The veteran really grabs first honors for his clever portrayal of the perpetually soused, squareshooting roue who is attempting to take Irene off Jimmy's hands. After every argument Lew appears and convinces Irene she really ought to leave with him. After winning her over he always talks the matter over with Jimmy. By that time the couple gain their second wind and Lew is out of luck. When he isn't busy attempting to woo Irene he plays the piano with an accompaniment of whiskey straights.

The one fault with the picture is that it drags. After reaching what appears to be a wow of a finish the story drags through another family argument of almost a reel before the couple make up again—and you know they'll be arguing before you go out the front door.

The studio would be wise to cut the picture with Cody's prize remark. Irene and Lew have been surprised just as they are leaving in the family limousine for a whoopee evening. They crawl into the back seat to hide and Jimmy and Natalie board the front seat and drive off.

Eventually the car gets stuck in mud two feet deep and the presence of the two in the back seat is revealed, when holdup men appear. Here the married pair start their constant battle.

"You go your way, I'll go mine," Irene declares as she splashes off through the mud. Jimmy follows her.

Cody and Natalie look at each other.

"Well, wot'll we do not?" she asks.

"I'll tell ya wash letsh do," Cody replies, "Letsh play miniature golf."

It's the prize gag of the show—it would be the right place to call a halt because the audience is ready to quit right here.

River's End

(Warners)

Fine Entertainment

(Reviewed by Bill Crouch)

THIS talker re-make of the James Oliver Curwood story, "River's End," is fine screen material. It is undoubtedly one of the best of many pictures depicting the Royal Northwest Mounted Police.

Charles Bickford plays the dual role of Conniston, the Mountie, and Keith, the fugitive. He creates two distinct personalities in his portrayals and his work is outstanding at all times. For once this big he-man doesn't have to play a shouting, blustering type of fellow. He is much better as the strong, personable officer who is in a tough spot, but doesn't let the situation get the best of him.

Junior Coghlan, as the son, and Farrell MacDonald, as the father, are outstanding in sympathetic roles. Evelyn Knapp as the girl is a new comer to the screen and makes a most favorable impression. She will undoubtedly go far if given the right roles.

Conniston, who has gone into the far North in search of Keith, who is wanted for murder—gets his man, but on the return trip dies of a frosted lung. MacDonald, Conniston's guide, takes a liking to Keith, who risked his freedom to save the lives of the two man-hunters, and suggests Keith pretend he is Conniston, as the men are physically alike even to looks. Keith agrees and, coached by MacDonald, he returns to headquarters and, although somewhat changed in manner, is thought to be Conniston. Here Keith finds he has been cleared of guilt and would be free if he could tell the true story.

He meets Conniston's girl, Miss Knapp, and they fall in love, she having never loved the real Conniston. Walter McGrail, who is also fond of Miss Knapp, discovers Conniston had been married before and has a wife and two children, in England. Faced with this apparent disgrace, Keith tells Evelyn the truth and she believes him, but fears the results of what the others might think. Rather than tell the true story, Keith is flogged by the Mounties and leaves, to find Evelyn on the boat waiting for him.

Michael Curtiz has directed this story in an interesting manner and, with a capable cast, has turned out a picture that will stand up in the seven-day spots and runs following. The snow scenes look a bit faked at times, but do not detract from the story.

Hot Heiress

(First National)

Fine Little Picture

(Reviewed by Bill Crouch)

BASED upon a musical comedy, "Hot Heiress" is both amusing and entertaining, and with the careful direction of Clarence Badger proves to be most delightful screen fare. True enough, the musical comedy rash breaks out at times, but doesn't spoil the story.

Should prove okay for the popular price theatres and following bookings. Should not be classed as a filmusical.

A romance between a steel riveter and an heiress forms the nucleus of this story, and although there's nothing new or outstanding about its development, it serves to provide a lot of laughs and many comedy situations.

When a red hot rivet flies through the bedroom of Ona Munson and sets the carpet afire, Ben Lyon stages a rescue that results in a love at first sight angle. From then on the heiress is after her man. Lyon, while all in favor of returning the affection, realizes the difference in social status. Miss Munson, however, doesn't feel it should bar their happiness, and invites Lyon out to meet her folks. He takes Tom Dugan, his pal, and Inez Courtney, Dugan's girl friend, along. Lyon is discovered to be a steel worker and Miss Munson's parents are shocked as Ona had told them he was an architect. When Lyon realizes he has been misrepresented he leaves, and not until Ona Munson follows him and tells him that wealth doesn't count with her, are things settled.

The song numbers fit well into the talker and speed the picture rather than slow it down. They are few in number but excellent in quality. Dugan and Courtney prove excellent in comedy roles and give plenty of competition to Munson and Lyon for top honors. Others in the cast are most acceptable.

Director Badger has not allowed his comedy scenes to be too over-drawn—a thing which could easily have happened. Instead, he lets them build up and go over with a punch.

The Gorilla

(First National)

Not So Hot

(Reviewed by Bill Crouch)

THE talker version of "The Gorilla" is not nearly as funny as the silent picture of that name. When caught in preview form the picture was in rough cut and, while further editing will help, the talker will not be any laugh riot. Will perhaps do okay in the smaller cities and neighborhood houses, but won't hold up for the week-end spots.

Joe Frisco in his feature picture debut proves to be rather flat and colorless as Garrity, the detective. His stage personality fails to "click" on the screen. Harry Gribbon, as Mulligan, carries the greater portion of the comedy and does the best work of the cast.

The story revolves about the search by the two detectives for the Gorilla, a killer who has terrorized the city. Told that he will appear in a certain home at midnight, the boys stand guard and try to catch the huge ape. Many comedy and thrill situations arise, some of which are extremely well handled and others are muffed. The story is finally worked out with the discovery of whom the Gorilla is and the two detectives are rewarded. A final scene showing them selling courses on how to be a detective is rather unnecessary and fails to add any particular value to the piece. The story is not always clearly told, and one often wonders what it is all about.

Roscoe Karns, Lila Lee and Walter Pidgeon have supporting roles, and manage somehow to make them interesting. Edwin Maxwell and Purnell Pratt do well. Bryan Foy, the director, has tried hard to get the most out of the many comedy situations, but lack of material has hampered him considerably. William H. Philbrick supplies some clever comedy antics as the butler.

The Soul Kiss

(M-G-M)

For Music Lovers

(Reviewed by Dick Crenshaw)

THIS is the life story of Jenny Lind. With a title signifying the fact, it would be a first class attraction that would have an appeal to the better type of audience. The somewhat sexy title may prove a drawback.

Grace Moore, lately recruited from the operatic stage, is the outstanding feature of the film, which is practically all music. For the musically inclined public the picture might easily be acclaimed as one of the outstanding shows of the year and should be advertised as such.

Reginald Denny makes a great comeback in this production as the tragedian. The heretofore comedian proves most versatile in his characterization of the ardent lover and the blind sweetheart of the Swedish nightingale.

A number of scenes from grand opera are shown, which will prove a delight to the music lover, while chorus numbers in beautiful and artistic settings often make the picture approximate a work of art. The settings are large in scope and many mob scenes of theatre audiences are portrayed.

The story begins with Jenny Lind's first triumph, and ends showing her under the management of the great P. T. Barnum, who is played by Wallace Beery very effectively. A beautiful story of tragic love is woven into the story through many musical numbers. Karl Dane has a small part that is carried well. The love and courtship of Denny, his blindness, his self exile from his sweetheart and their reunion form the story, along with the stage triumphs of Jenny Lind. The picture is fine from a musical standpoint, and will appeal to class audiences. Some of the dialogue lines are confusing, due to a number of Italian phrases inserted.

The Virtuous Sin

Just Another Picture

(Reviewed by Bill Crouch)

"THE VIRTUOUS SIN" puts Kay Francis, Walter Huston, Kenneth McKenna and Jobyna Howland in Russia in January, 1914, for no reason at all. The story is that of the love of a young scientist for a girl who does not return his love, but agrees to marry him so that he can go on with his great work for humanity.

McKenna gives a good performance as the sensitive, dreaming, young chap interested only in his research work in bacteriology. All goes well and just after he has succeeded in discovering an unknown germ and is about to give his genius to the world, along comes the war. Walter Huston comes into the story as the hard-bitten army general, who refuses to let any man off army service. Kay Francis pleads in vain for a hearing of her husband's case.

In the trenches things become so unendurable for McKenna that he breaks down and tells Huston just what he thinks of the order of things that takes a man like himself and his usefulness to Russia out of a laboratory and puts him into a trench where he is a total loss. Huston has him arrested and sentenced to death for sedition. Kay rushes to the garrison to see what can be done. She learns of a cabaret near the garrison, that the general never looks at a woman, but sometimes goes there for an evening's entertainment. She plans to attract him and get her husband released.

By a dazzling array of moods and tempers, as a member of Jobyna Howland's cabaret girls, she wins his love, but finds herself in love with him. She is forced to tell him that she is McKenna's wife. He orders her away, unconvinced of her love. She returns to her home, not knowing that he has released her husband after all. At the garrison McKenna learns what has happened and tries to take the life of Huston. In the middle of this mix-up a bombardment begins and Huston saves McKenna's life as he tries to throw himself over the parapet. McKenna returns home and releases Kay from her loveless marriage with him. Kay goes to Huston, convinces him of her love and presumably they live happily ever after.

It is odd that such a dull picture should be interesting. The cast was far too good for such mediocre fare. Will do for regular runs and with the Walter Huston name should hold up.

The Land of Missing Men

(Tiffany)

Very Good

(Reviewed by Charles F. Hynes)

A NUMBER of unusual angles and good directorial touches makes this a very good program picture. It has plenty of action and Director J. P. McCarthy has turned in a neat job. He is willing to leave some things to the imagination and the suggestion adds to the picture's punch. The story is a fairly obvious one, but Bob Steele and Al St. John make a good team and put this over.

Bob is a great rider and surely does his stuff in this. Then there are a couple of good fights to add excitement. The after-the-battle scene in the saloon, with the player-piano grinding out a tune, carries a wallop.

To a country overrun with cattle thieves come Bob and his partner, St. John. They are accused of being bandits who have been holding up the stage coach. When they drop into a saloon to seek information concerning the trail to the border, they find a number of dead and one man dying. The latter mumbles about a threatened hold-up of the stage upon which his daughter is a passenger, so to save her, Bob holds up the coach and kidnaps the girl. After learning of her father's death, the girl escapes. Meanwhile, Bob and his pal make their way to the outlaw's camp, where they are given shelter, although under suspicion. With a posse on the way to the scene, Bob and his pal shoot it out with the outlaws and expose the real culprit, who is the sheriff. There is no final clinch, the picture ending with the two wounded cowboys on a buckboard on their way back to town. Caryl Lincoln is the girl and she is pretty, although she hasn't much to do. Emilio Fernandez is good as the outlaw and Al Jennings, Fern Emmett and Edward Dunn turn in fair performances.

Young Woodley

(Elstree)

Wooden

(Reviewed by Robert Hoge)

AGAIN English producers have tried to turn out a picture that would appeal to the American public, and again they have failed. They apparently had supreme faith in "Young Woodley," leasing the George M. Cohan theatre for its showing and dubbing it "A British International Theatre," but the small audience in the house laughed during a number of the serious moments.

And the picture consists entirely of serious moments. It is heavy fodder, unrelieved by humor or light touches, and it is padded out to the extent of boredom. The story is slight and trite and nearly all of the players were miscast. The direction is mediocre in the extreme. The recording, however, was beyond criticism.

The story is so banal that it is futile to give a synopsis of it. It centers about a college youth disliked by the headmaster. The wife hates the headmaster in turn and falls in love with the youth. The latter thereupon tumbles for her, without any apparent reason for she is a matron, and they are discovered in a clinch by hubby. The youth then is taken out of college by his father. What a climax!

Not only is the picture entirely lacking in entertainment values but the Oxonian accent of the players will prove unintelligible to many American ears.

Give it plenty of short subject support.

Barber John's Boy

(Warners)

Good Dramatic Fare

(Reviewed by Bill Crouch)

"BARBER JOHN'S BOY" is an interesting little picture based upon a story of the same name by Ben Ames Williams. The screen version is well told and has plenty of dramatic moments. Strong enough for the regular first run houses, it will prove okay for the split week spots.

Phillips Holmes, in the title role, is outstanding and divides honors with Grant Mitchell, who plays the part of Barber John.

The son of a murderer, Holmes leaves college when the truth of his father's deed is told around the campus. He goes to the home town and, after many turndowns, is hired by George Marion, a banker. Here he falls in love with Lucille Powers, who also works in the bank. Everything goes well until Mitchell returns from prison. The older friends of Mitchell are down to meet him, but Holmes suffers from an inferiority complex and doesn't meet the train.

Mitchell starts his barber shop again and, although the townspeople still believe Barber John was in the right, his son cannot down the disgrace. One day, while Mitchell is in the bank, $2,000 are stolen from Holmes. The boy believes his father did it, and when called to report why the shortage, he admits stealing it. The father, not wishing to see his son go to prison, says he took the money. However, it is Miss Powers who finds out the truth and exposes Dwight Frye, another teller in the bank, who admits the theft. Holmes and Mitchell are exonerated and the boy's faith in his father is restored.

Miss Powers is well cast, as are Russell Simpson, Charles Sellon, Barbara Weeks, Dwight Frye and George Marion. Otis Harlan, in a comedy role, is comical and steals numerous scenes.

The Convict's Code

(Syndicate Pictures)

Cheap Hoke

(Reviewed by Charles F. Hynes)

THIS is another of the prison break pictures and it's a pretty sorry mess. The story is a series of absurdities and fails to click. The idea of a man on trial for murder being defended by his enemy and rival is carrying things a bit too far. And the procedure at the murder trial is so wet that the picture misses by a mile. It seems that the idea was to capitalize on the present vogue in prison break dramas, regardless of plausibility or story. As such, it succeeds after a fashion, but it surely looks sick in comparison with some of the films which started the current vogue.

Cullen Landis certainly rates better treatment than he gets in this, as the dapper bond salesman sentenced to burn for murder. It seems that his rival had plotted the affair and arrived on the scene in time to be a star witness. Only the story writer decreed otherwise, and so he rival is placed in the role of attorney for the defense, fancy that.

The prison break is done in such a casual and slipshod manner that the punch is lost. Of course, the designing attorney gets the works and the hero is saved, but how the other convicts got into the death house is more of a mystery than the murder upon which this is based.

Landis does his best with his role, which crimps him plenty, and Eloise Taylor is fair playing opposite. William E. Morris has a laborious time of it as the governor. Lyle Evans is a good heavy. Mabel Z. Carroll's work as the vamp is about as effective as her work in writing the story in collaboration with Vincent Valentini. John Irwin and John Burkell try hard for comedy, but their lines don't click. In a 15-cent house, the audience got a lot of laughs out of the "serious" moments of this meller. It has plenty of exploitation angles.

Big Money

(Pathe)

Full of Wisecracks

(Reviewed by Dick Crenshaw)

THIS talker drew a big hand and plenty of laughs at a preview. "Big Money" carries a brand of humor that seems destined to please the entire family.

Eddie Quillan is seen at his best in this type of picture which gives him an opportunity to banter with the entire cast. Aside from the fact that the plot smacks strangely of "Street of Chance," the show looks like a natural.

The story concerns Eddie's luck in gambling and the difficulties it leads him into. He ultimately becomes connected with an underworld gambling gang of the gentlemanly variety. A murder and the love of his girl cause Eddie to decide that easy money is not so desirable as he had imagined.

After getting in and out of jail and receiving a few scares from a gangster who is intent on revenge for the shooting of his brother during a poker game, Eddie comes out with flying colors and marries the boss's daughter.

Eddie's pal, played by Robert Armstrong, forms a good target for many wisecracks and is well suited to the role of a gentleman crook. No love scenes to speak of and no music.

Will suit that large group that has suffered from an overabundance of war pictures and musical productions. Should go well in split weeks or on program bills.

The Steel Highway

(Warners)

Drama with Punch

(Reviewed by Bill Crouch)

DIRECTOR WILLIAM WELLMAN has taken a good story and a fine cast and has turned out a picture that has the stuff which brings them to the box-office.

This talker is not done on an elaborate scale, but is better than regular program fare and should do well in the general run of houses.

The story is an original by Maude Fulton, and is said to be the only original story filmed by Warners this year. From the punch it packs, they were wise in using it. Regis Toomey and Grant Withers are an engineer and fireman, respectively, who have become good friends. Toomey is happily married, while Withers is still giving the local waitresses his divided attention.

As expected, Withers and Miss Astor fall in love, but, because of their desire not to hurt Toomey, Withers leaves the house. Toomey, wondering why the sudden departure, thinks the worst, and while the boys are out on a run they fight. Toomey is seriously injured and the train is nearly wrecked.

Withers takes to wild life again, and not until he has nearly married Joan Blondell, a waitress, does he realize he should aid Toomey. Withers goes to the house and finds Toomey stone blind. Broken up over this, he tries to persuade the division chief to let him take a group of loaded cars out on a bridge which is threatened to be inundated by the overflowing river. Toomey hears of the plan and, knowing his wife loves Withers, goes blindly to the waiting engine and takes it out onto the bridge, which collapses. He is killed. Withers, who attempted to stop him, fails, but later he and Mary meet and plan to marry.

The three important members of the cast do splendid work. Miss Astor is charming as the wife and Withers does his best work in a long time as the friend. Toomey, as usual, is most convincing, and his work while blinded is a fine bit of drama. Joan Blondell in a drunk scene with Grant caused a riot of laughs. Many clever comedy touches are inserted throughout the story.

Short Subjects

The Little Big House

(Tiffany)

Excellent

THIS comedy has plenty of kick, the work of the Tiffany chimps being nothing short of sensational. It's a travesty on the current flood of prison dramas and contains plenty of laughs. In this a "limey" chimp is sent up for robbery when he is caught with a stolen bag a crook had asked him to hold. He is made cellmate of a killer, who arranges a break. Our hero gets to his girl's house in time to give the crook a thrashing. The fight of the two chimps is a treat, and any audience will vote this a crackerjack comedy. Running time, 16 minutes.

For any kind of bill.

The Booze Hangs High

(Vitaphone Song Cartoon)

Pretty Good

PRODUCTION value of this one rates high, but entertainment value is lowered because of the absence of originality in gags—a trait predominating in most cartoons of the current age. Here and there, we find in this "Looney Tune" a clever twist, easily recognized from the cut-and-dried material depended upon for laughs. Audience reaction was favorable. Vocal renditions helped tremendously, particularly those by the bass singer. Running time, 6 minutes.

Suitable for any spot, particularly where a touch of lightness is needed.

Circus Capers

(Pathe)

Enjoyable

THIS Aesop Fable cartoon stacks up as one of the best cartoons we've seen in a long time, its creator having made a very obvious attempt to avoid the conventional and commonplace and has upset all precedent by injecting a miniature story. It's about a clown in love with the bareback rider in the circus and his heartbreak. His rendition of "Laugh, Clown, Laugh" is good for a huge laugh. Running time, 10 minutes.

Audio Review, No. 40

(Pathe)

Very Good

TERRY RAMSAYE has made this issue extremely interesting and it packs a general appeal. The units include a fishing sequence that will make the males homesick for the trout streams, a tour of romantic Bagdad, with glimpses of out-of-the-way sections of the city, and strikingly effective shots of the Arctic Sea. Recording and tinting are excellent. Running time, 10 minutes.

Okay anywhere.

The Bard of Broadway

(Vitaphone Varieties No. 1091-2)

Dandy

WALTER WINCHELL is the star of this short and while his personality doesn't rate 100 per cent, he has been supplied with an excellent vehicle and clicks satisfactorily. His syndicated column has made his name known throughout the country and the featurette is worth plugging. The subject opens with the girls of a finishing school listening raptly to a radio broadcast by the columnist, and the Winchell influence is demonstrated when one of the prety studes, giving a recitation, works of the pretty studes, giving a recitation, works examples of Winchellian slang. They're expelled and go to a night club with the hope of meeting their hero. The place is raided, but Walter knows the police sergeant and gets them off. Running time, 12 minutes.

Fine to build up a program.

Cobb Goes Fishing

(Pathe)

Fine

THIS Grantland Rice Sportlight is the best of the series by a long shot and it boasts of a prominent and excellent cast—Irvin Cobb and Grantland Rice. They go fishing in a rowboat and between bites they discuss the ancient and honorable pastime of angling, with Cobb spilling a lot of advice and wisecracks. Cobb admits that he violates all the known rules of plug-casting, but that he manages to catch fish because of his sex appeal. His homely philosophy will be relished by all types of patrons. Running time, 10 minutes.

Plug it in your ads.

At the Round Table

(Vitaphone Varieties No. 1047)

Fine

AROUND the table are Mark Hellinger, New York columnist; James J. Corbett, pugilist; De Wolf Hopper, actor, and Damon Runyon, sports writer, constituting a quartette of name values. A youth, posing as a reporter, breaks into the cafe to get an interview from Corbett on keeping fit, admitting soberly that he has never heard of any of the four. They are stunned, but it proves to be a gag staged by Helinger. It's a slight excuse for the subject, but the rapid repartee and novelty of the short make it outstanding. Running time, 8 minutes.

Good for all types of houses.

The Heart Breaker

(Vitaphone Varieties No. 1012-3)

Good

WITH Eddie Foy, Jr., as the hero, the story gallops at a fast pace and manages to be interesting all the way through. Foy appears first as a soda jerker whose sex appeal packs the place with girls and who is "promoted" to a better store in the chain, leaving behind him a girl clerk who has fallen in love with him. She follows, but finds he has become a cabaret entertainer. Eddie picks a fight with a chap who had become too attached to the singer's flame and there's a shooting scrape. When the lights turn up Eddie and the girl from home are the only ones in the place, and they clinch for the happy ending. Eddie sings a number of songs that are particularly good. Running time, 14 minutes.

Lehar to Direct and Act in His Operetta

Foreign Version Talkers the Only Means Of Breaking Into Film Markets Abroad

Novelty Passes and Fans Now Demand Pictures in Their Native Language

Washington—With the novelty era long since passed, motion picture audiences throughout Europe are becoming impatient over the lengthy period elapsing between the appearance of talkers in languages which they do not understand, and pictures with dialogue as it is spoken in their native tongue. The deathknell of English talkers, once successful because of their novelty, was sounded within the past few months when occasional domestic productions were screened in foreign countries. Fans saw and heard pictures with their own language and liked them, and now are greatly displeased when theatres show talkers in other tongues.

The current installment of the United States government's exhaustive survey of film conditions in Europe, which has been appearing regularly in Motion Picture News, is found below:

The outstanding feature in the Spanish motion-picture trade during 1929 was the introduction of sound films. Several important theatres in Madrid and Barcelona installed equipment and presented sound films toward the middle of the year, and at its conclusion Bilbao, Zaragoza, Valencia, and Sevilla had either secured equipment or taken definite steps toward that objective. The public was enthusiastic upon hearing the first sound films, and the theatres were well filled during the first few weeks. Interest subsequently decreased, and there was noticeable impatience, owing to the inability of the masses to understand the foreign languages used. The opinions of a number of authorities agree that foreign-language sound films have passed the peak and that the future success of sound programs in Spain depends upon the use of the Spanish language.

At the beginning of 1930 sound equipment was in operation or definitely decided upon by the following theatres:

| | Make |
|---|---|
| Madrid: | |
| Callao | American. |
| San Miguel | Do. |
| Palacio de la Musica | Do. |
| Real Cinema | Do. |
| Monumental | Do. |
| Royalty | Melodion. |
| San Carlos | American. |
| Cinema Espana | Do. |
| Barcelona: | |
| Coliseum | Do. |
| Tivoli | Do. |
| Paris Cine | Gaumont. |
| Femina | American. |
| Bilboa: | |
| Coliseo Albia | Do. |
| Buenos Aires | Do. |
| Zaragoza: | |
| Cine Alambra | Melodion. |
| Quintana y Cia | Syntax. |
| Sevilla: | |
| Llorens | American. |
| Valencia: | |
| Olympia | Do. |

Other makes of sound film equipment are on the market, but as far as is known no sales have been made. The principal ones are the Zeiss-Ikon, based on German and British patents, and the Electro-Vox line.

Distribution

The subject of distribution may be described more accurately by following the "temporada," or season, which is from September 1 to August 31, rather than the calendar year. The 1928-29 season was exclusively of silent films.

Humor

Yiddish, Spanish, Italian and English are spoken in the Educational-Ideal comedy, "Si, Si, Senor," which features Tom Patricola and Joe Phillips. This was not done to increase the foreign market value of this comedy. The story was written around the special talents of Patricola and Phillips, and the laughs are sought from the introduction of the foreign languages, as used by the comedians.

For the 1929-30 season distributors have brought in very close to 500 feature films, or about 100 less than for the previous film year. Approximately 75 per cent, or 375 films, were of American origin, 50 were German, 40 French, 15 British, and 20 Italian, Swedish, Danish, and others. Around 125 were sound films (music effects, talking, etc.), and the United States supplied not less than 120 of that number. One German and one British sound film have been mentioned as the only non-American products of importance. From 90 to 95 per cent of the sound films were accompanied by silent versions.

Domestic Production

Local film manufacturing may not as yet be described as an industry. Numerous persons and firms are listed as producers, but few are equipped for complete production. Several successful films purporting to have been of Spanish origin are said to have been made in whole or in part in France and Germany, and in other cases it is not known exactly where or how manufacturing is accomplished. It appears, however, that from 20 to 25 feature films were completed in Spain during the year, and 3 of them involved sound. Little progress has been made in the production of sound short subjects.

The average cost of domestic films is about 100,000 pesetas ($19,300), with 50,000 and 200,000 pesetas as limits for 1929. As to studios, among more than 20 advertised, it would appear that the only ones which have produced regularly over a reasonable period of time are Madrid Film (Enrique Blanco, owner), Carrera de San Francisco 4, and Omnium Cine (Emilio Sanz Cruzado, owner), Bravo Murillo 26, both of Madrid. These two companies report their total investments in equipment as 600,000 and 150,000 pesetas, respectively. Laboratories suitably equipped for developing, cutting, title making, etc., are operated by Madrid Film, mentioned above, and Trilla, S. A., Rosellón 255, Barcelona. Fifteen other laboratories purport to be functioning.

Prospects for production in 1930 indicate that few additional films over the 1929 figure will appear. However, a greater proportion of sound films are anticipated, along with an improvement in the quality of both kinds. It is doubtful that addiitonal studios will be equipped with sound apparatus.

La Sociedad Patria Films, Paseo del Prado 14, Madrid, is reported to have been formed with a capital of 2,000,000 pesetas for the purpose of manufacturing sound films by the patent of Jose Luis Fernandez Ayuso, which consists of a synchronizing apparatus using a disk and loud-speaker and requiring no special projector. The company plans to produce two sound films in the near future, to be called "La Patria Chica" and "Isidrin, o las Cuarenta y Nueve Provincias."

No other studio is known to be equipped permanently with sound apparatus.

Ten new motion-picture theatres are known to have been constructed during 1929, six of which were in Madrid: Europa, 2,500 seats; Metropolitano, 2,500; Castilla, 900; Delicias, 2,000; San Carlos, 2,000; and Palacio de la Prensa, 1,000. A new theatre with 1,800 seats is being constructed on the Avenida Reina Mercedes in Sevilla. The aggregate seating capacity is estimated at 15,000, or an average of 1,500 each.

At the end of 1929 not fewer than 300 motion-picture theatres were functioning daily and 1,740 irregularly. In addition to these, about 1,035 literary and vaudeville theatres were showing motion pictures occasionally. Moreover, from 250 to 300 other amusement places, as bull rings, football fields, schools, hotels, cafés, and clubs, were using films during certain seasons of the year. The Anuario del Cinematografista for the 1928-29 season published the names of 3,357 theatres or amusement places showing films.

From 100 to 150 theatres have been reconstructed as a result of the fire in the Novedades theatre in Madrid. Little additional seating capacity was added, however, as the reforms consisted chiefly in metal screening for fire protection.

There is no set policy as to wiring. Most operators seem to be unconcerned, or at least awaiting the lead of foreign developments.

Legislation

There was no important legislation in 1929 against the importation or projection of foreign-made films or motion-picture equipment. One unsuccessful attempt was made by a firm possessing patent rights to prohibit the exhibition of sound films manufactured by competing equipment, and throughout the year there were numerous press rumors concerning legislation to restrict film imports and to levy special taxes for stimulating domestic production. In March a commission was appointed to study the industry, but its findings have caused no new legislation. At the end of the year the situation remained unchanged, and the trade anticipates no important legislation in 1930 affecting the foreign trade.

During the year American film prestige not only held ground but increased.

Stiff Dialogue Rule in Portugal

During 1929 six new movie theatres were constructed in Portugal, their combined seating capacity being 5,100. Two smaller cinemas were reconstructed. No cinemas in Portugal are equipped with sound apparatus, and it is not expected that it will ever be generally used. There is a rule of the Portuguese Government that no foreign language, not even one phrase, is to be used in the titles of silent films or speech of sound films.

Three films, all silent, were produced in Portugal during 1929; one of 4,000 meters

Berlin—Twenty-seven leading distributors made a sensational bolt from the old association, the A. D. F., and formed a new unit. They invite cooperating with the old organization, on condition the latter agrees to certain changes, including complete operating of general operating principles.

Profit in Britain

London—Emphasizing the evolution through which the British industry is passing due to the advent of talkers, Gaumont British reports net of $1,097,120 for the year ended March 31, 1930, after taxes, depreciation, debenture interest and debenture sinking fund.

costing about 100,000 escudos ($4,500), one of 4,000 meters costing about 90,000 escudos ($4,000), and one of 600 meters. There were produced by Lupo Film (Ltd.), of Oporto. About 235 one-reel films showing Portuguese scenes and events were produced.

During the year 1,059 films of a total of 1,163,268 meters were censored and passed, only one film having been rejected. These films were of various origins, as indicated in the following list: American, 545 films of 710,848 meters; French, 150 films of 134,286 meters; German, 90 films of 198,455 meters; Portuguese, 239 films of 61,845 meters; all others, 35 films of 57,833 meters.

The outlook for motion pictures remains good, and it is understood that attendance in 1929 was greater than during the preceding year. American films are still in good demand, but the competition of German films is making itself felt. The few Russian films imported have made a very favorable impression, and their number is expected to increase. The language rule of the censorship hampers the introduction of such films, as some Russian phrases and terms can not be adequately translated into Portuguese.

It is rumored that one theatre will experiment with sound films toward the end of 1930. However, this will be confined to musical films, as dialogue is considered impossible. If this theatre does install sound equipment, it will use that of European manufacture, as American equipment is considered too expensive. It is explained that cinema owners can hardly afford a large investment in equipment as long as the custom of opening the cinemas only from 9 p. m. to midnight prevails. With two matinees, the total exhibitions per week are only nine, whereas the average in an American city is over 30. Furthermore, the public will not pay big prices for tickets. The maximum price for a single seat in the best cinema in Lisbon is equivalent to $0.44 United States currency, and the average about $0.30. These prices include the tax which works out at from 12 to 15 per cent of gross receipts for the better cinemas and more for the cheaper houses.

There is no important commercial production of films in Yugoslavia. Only notable events, such as great disasters, activities of the King and his troops, various festivities, and the like, are filmed. Neither large feature films nor even ordinary 5-reel films are produced. The principal distributors have laboratories were Serbian (Cyrillic characters) and Croatian (Latin characters) texts are inserted for films imported.

It is difficult to state how many feature films were censored during 1929. It is believed that 60 to 65 per cent of them were American. Information regarding the proportion of other countries is not available, but in the Belgrade consular district it is approximately 35 per cent. It is not known how many pictures censored were made with sound, but thus far only one picture which may be called truly a sound picture has been shown in Belgrade. That picture, of American origin, appeared early in January, 1930. There have been other so-called sound pictures, also American for the most part, which really consisted of bits of dialogue here and there and occasionally a song or orchestra music. All these films had a silent version in Serbian.

The year 1929 was a very bad one for the film trade, but increased interest was noted toward the end of the year when sound film was introduced, first in Zagreb then in Belgrade. The American sound films are now the only ones on the market, and American prestige in this regard has greatly increased by the fact that America was the first to introduce sound films into the kingdom. With the exception of one Homon and one Klangfilm apparatus, all sound apparatus has been of American origin.

It is now generally recognized in Belgrade that no cinema can long continue its business unless equipped with sound apparatus. The public is enthusiastic, although, as indicated above, most of the sound pictures introduced have merely had bits of dialogue and music and would probably have been total failures in the United States. In many cases the synchronization was poor, yet the small local theatres were crowded, as everyone wished to hear a sound film. Cinemas have been crowded to such extent that owners seem not to regret having invested considerable sums of money in the purchase and installation of sound apparatus. They appear to be optimistic regarding the future of the sound film and appear to believe that by the end of 1931 silent films will have completely disappeared in Belgrade.

There appears to be no movement toward the equipment of theatres with sound apparatus outside Belgrade and Zagreb, as the small theatres in the villages and other towns do not possess sufficient funds to purchase such equipment. Naturally, there is no production of sound pictures in the country and will not be for some time.

No studio expansions are contemplated.

There is no legislation contemplated of a nature inimical to the interests of American films.

Quiet in Greece

With the exception of one new 450-seat theatre constructed in Saloniki, no new cinema theatres were built or converted from other places of amusement during 1929 in Greece. In the city of Athens not only were no new theatres constructed, but a first-run 800-seat theatre, the Mondial, was converted from a cinema house to a musical comedy and revue theatre.

In October, 1929, two of the first-run theatres in Athens, Atticon, and Ideal, completed their installations for sound-reproducing equipment. These were the first cinema theatres in Greece to be wired for the showing of sound films. The equipment used in these theatres is of American make. The seating capacity of Atticon is about 1,500 and that of Ideal about 1,100. In addition, the Pantheon, a first-run 750-seat theatre in Athens, installed later in the year a Syntok (British) sound-reproducing apparatus, but the equipment has not worked satisfactorily, and the distributors of sound films have refused to allow the theatre to show their films.

In Piraeus only one theatre, High Life, was wired toward the end of 1929. The equipment installed is of American make. This theatre has an estimated seating capacity of about 600.

The only other Greek city in which sound equipment was installed during 1929 is Saloniki. The installations in Saloniki at present consist of the following: Pathe, seating 900, American equipment; Dionyssia, seating 850; and Palace, seating 850, both Tobis-Klang (German).

During 1929 only two films, Bora and Astero, were produced by the Dag Film Co. of Athens. The latter was shown with considerable success for two consecutive weeks in one of the first-run houses in Athens and later throughout the entire country. Both films were silent, as Greek producers have no facilities for producing sound films. Although exact figures are not available, it is not believed that these films cost more than $2,500 to $3,000 each to produce. In addition, production was started on two other films during 1929, Far from the World, by the Olympia Film Co., and The Apaches of Athens, by the Dag Film Co. The first was completed early in 1930 and shown in Athens.

As can be seen, the Greek film-producing industry is still in its infancy, and, judging from the little progress made in the last three years, it will be a long time before it acquires sufficient importance to command any public attention outside of Greece.

Trade statistics indicate that during the 1928-29 theatrical season, from October, 1928, to May, 1929, 130 feature films and 80 serials were exhibited in Athens. Inasmuch as all films are usually first shown in Athens and then in the provincial cities, this figure may be applied to the whole of Greece as well. All the serials were American, but it is estimated that not more than 40, or about 30 per cent, of the feature films were American, the balance being mostly of German or French origin.

As there were no sound-reproducing installations in Greece during the 1928-29 theatrical season, no sound films were exhibited in that period. Between October and December, 1929, however, which period falls into the 1929-30 season, about 10 feature sound films were shown by the two Athens theatres which were wired for sound films. Only one of these sound films was French, Le Quartier Latin; the rest were all American.

The scarcity of good American silent feature films began to make itself felt in 1929. This was one of the reasons why Greek theatre managers had to turn to European producers for filling their requirements as long as they had no facilities for exhibiting sound films. The installation of sound apparatus in the early part of the 1929-30 season, of course, changed the situation, and as the number of wired theatres increases, the demand for American sound films is bound to increase also. However, there are some serious obstacles to be overcome which may tend to retard the expansion of the use of sound synchronized and especially of dialogue films in Greece.

One obstacle is the high initial cost of wiring a theatre. There are, of course, lower-priced equipments, but theatre owners hesitate to order and install these systems for fear of not being able to obtain films from the local distributors of American sound films, who have agreed among themselves not to allow films to be shown on any equipment except the best-known American systems until trials are made and the apparatus in question proves to reproduce satisfactorily. Owing to the heavy Government taxation, the cinema business is not a very lucrative enterprise in Greece and, therefore, no matter how moderately priced a sound installation may be, it will be beyond the reach of the bulk of the provincial theatres for several years to come and until general conditions improve.

There is also the difficulty of language. At the present time silent films are shown with subtitles in Greek and French, but this principle can not, obviously, be carried out with dialogue films.

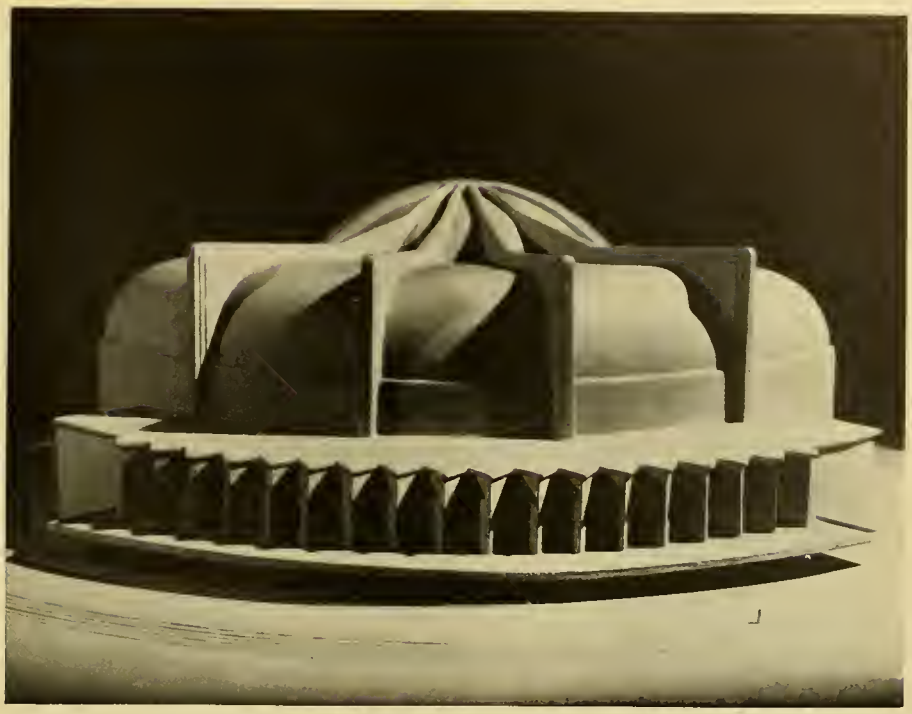
A Semi-Circular Theatre to House Divine Comedy

FEATURING AN AUDITORIUM SEATING 5,000, IT'S PLAN IS A HALF CIRCLE WITHOUT BALCONIES

A THEATRE designed for the purpose of housing adequately Norman Bel Geddes' project for staging Dante's Divine Comedy, which the Chicago World's Fair has announced as an intended production:



AUDITORIUM: The auditorium has a capacity of five thousand people. Like a Greek theatre, its plan is a half circle facing the stage without balconies or galleries. No proscenium or curtain divides the auditorium from the stage. A great dome spans the stage and part of the auditorium; the remaining part of the auditorium is covered by a ceiling that curves down into the exterior walls. The absence of balconies and galleries permits a steeper ramp so that each spectator can easily see over the head of the person in front of him.

ACTING STAGE: The stage, planned from the standpoint of the Inferno, Purgatory, and Paradise episodes, is the only scenery required—all variations being achieved by lighting. In general the stage is circular in form and is composed almost entirely of steps. Its center is a pit, the slope of which rises on the far side to a height of sixty feet. The near side of the slope terminates in a ledge only one-forth as high which steps down toward the audience in a series of terraces until it reaches the level of the bottom of the pit, where it terminates in a valley running halfway around the circle. Separating this valley from the audience is a wall seven feet high.

UNDERSTAGE: Passageways and stairways under the stage connect the dressing rooms with the pit, towers and other portions of the stage. Part of the space under the rear portion of the stage is taken up by dressing rooms occupying four floors and connecting the under structure of the tall and short towers on each side. Men's rooms are on one side and women's on the other.

Five assembly rooms, each with a capacity of two hundred actors, are located at different positions connecting directly with the various entrances to the stage.

Large rooms for the accommodation of properties and costumes adjoin the assembly rooms.

The remaining space under the stage is taken up by three sound chambers and their supplementary rooms. These chambers are for the purpose of making various abstract sounds, magnifying or multiplying them to a desired intensity and then releasing them through one or all of nine tubes. One tube terminates at the top of each tower, another at the bottom of the pit, others below the seats at either side of the auditorium in the rear and directly overhead in the center of the auditorium.

Administrative Offices and Public Lounges: These comprise the entrance on the first level, the promenade on the second level, and the open air terrace on the third level.

Hospital, Buffets Included

The ground floor of the auditorium is taken up with the entrance foyer, box offices, waiting room, retiring rooms, hospital. Leading from the entrance to the second and third levels are two wide stairways and four wide escalators. There are four additional exterior stair exits on each side of the auditorium.

A wide promenade with long glass windows opening out on a cantilevered terrace that also forms the porte-cochère comprises most of the second level. In addition there are buffets and lounge rooms for men and women. On this level are the entrances to the first two tiers of seats.

The third level has a narrower promenade and entrances to the last two tiers of seats. The roof of the terrace below forms an open air terrace for this level.

General Notes on Building: Galleries for lamps and electricians are concealed in the ceiling dome, and light pits behind the stage. All the lighting is controlled from a single switchboard.

Frame of Dome Exposed

The framing of the dome and ceiling of the auditorium is exposed on the exterior as part of the architectural design, thus eliminating the usual "covering" and thereby lessening the cost of the structure.

The distance from the front of the stage to the back of auditorium is 144 feet and the spread of the auditorium at its widest point is 376 feet. The diameter of the stage is 125 feet. From the floor of the first row in the auditorium to the ceiling measures 104 feet; whereas the top of the dome is 140 feet above the stage floor level at the center of the pit. The five large assembly rooms for the chorus are each approximately 24 by 28 feet. The entrance foyer is 52 feet wide and 312 feet long. The promenade above the entrance foyer is the same width, but the addition of a buffet at either end increases the length to 383 feet.

MUCH LIKE A COMMUNITY HAS GEDDES GROUPED THESE THREE THEATRES, CABARET AND GARDEN.

Two Theatres and Cabaret In Repertory Group

ROOF GARDEN AND THEATRE FOR CHILDREN LIKEWISE RADIATE FROM CENTRAL TOWER

A SELF contained group for a repertory organization, consisting of a central tower from which radiate one large and one small theatre, a cabaret and roof garden, and a theatre for children.

THE LARGE AND SMALL THEATRES: The large and small theatres have the same plan with the exception that the large theatre seats 1,700 and the small, 600 people. The main axis of the stage and auditorium is along the diagonal of the square represented by the ground plan; thus getting a deeper stage and increasing the seating area.

Wide aisles between the rows of seats eliminate the necessity of transverse aisles. By this arrangement every seat has direct access to an exit, has plenty of leg room and commands an excellent view of the entire stage, none being too distant to be desirable, nor too high up or low down. The absence of balconies and the increase in the number of aisles with the direction of their discharge gently downward eliminate the greatest source of danger from panic in case of fire.

There are no footlights, no visible orchestra pit, no proscenium arch. A flight of steps across the entire front of the stage and two side jambs, that lose themselves in the curve of the ceiling, alone divide the stage from the auditorium. The only curtain is a heavy one of steel on the ceiling of the basement, which cuts it off from the auditorium, and which would only be used in an emergency.

There are two movable stage platforms which are raised and lowered to the basement by hydraulic power; in their final positions at the proper level, they constitute the stage floor. The two stage platforms make it possible for one scene to be set in the basement while another is being "played," the substitution being effected during twenty seconds of darkness or behind a curtain of light.

THE CHILDREN'S THEATRE: The Children's Theatre is a small proscenium type theatre seating 200 children on the main floor and 60 adults on a balcony. The length is 84 feet and the width is 56 feet.

The stage has a second stage above it for marionette shows. The theatre is rectangular in shape with two side aisles. Above the auditorium is a rehearsal room. On the roof are terraces for outdoor dance and gymnasium rehearsals.

THE CABARET: The cabaret has a dining capacity of 250 people. The main axis of the entrance, dance floor, and orchestra is on the diagonal of the square represented by the ground plan of the building. The main dining room is two stories high with a balcony around the second floor. The kitchen and pantries are in the basement with service elevators to the balcony level.

Directly across from the entrance is a circular orchestra pit sunk below the level of the dance floor. From this the dance floor radiates. Behind the orchestra pit is an elevated stage with steps on either side leading down to the dance floor. A movable screen regulates the depth of the stage.

On either side of the entrance lobby are retiring rooms and pantries.

THE ROOF GARDEN: The roof garden is rectangular in plan, with four terraces and a circular orchestra space. Stairs and an elevator rise from the lobby to the balcony and roof gardens.

GENERAL NOTES ON BUILDING: The orchestra pits in the large and small theatres occupy the space between the foyer and the stage on the ground level. This pit is entirely invisible to the audience, the sound reaching the auditorium through perforations in the risers of the continuous flight of steps which form the apron to the stage. This room is large enough to accommodate an orchestra of sixty musicians; the conductor commands a view of the entire stage through a periscope.

A single dome spans the stage and the auditorium, forming a vast cyclorama including both walls and ceiling and clearing the stage space of the usual wilderness of ropes, drops and borders.

The major part of the space underneath the auditorium is occupied by a broad quadrant-shaped foyer, forming an ample promenade, from either side of which broad stairways lead to the auditorium.

The basement under the ground floor is storage and shifting space for scenery.

On the roof is space for open air rehearsals, directly adjacent to the interior rehearsal rooms.

AUDITORIUM PLAN

Light galleries surround the dome and are controlled from one switchboard. This control is located above and behind the heads of the spectators and concealed from them, the projectors being on disappearing carriages, hidden by a parapet save when in actual use.

The depth of the stage of the large theatre is 52 feet. The depth of the auditorium is 100 feet, and the spread of the auditorium including the side aisles is 236 feet. The height of the dome above the auditorium floor level is 96 feet.

The depth of the stage of the small theatre is 24 feet. The depth of the auditorium is 64 feet, and the spread of the auditorium including the side aisles is 144 feet. The height of the dome above the auditorium floor level is 64 feet.

THE CENTRAL TOWER: The Central Tower is composed of over one hundred large dressing rooms each having outside windows and showers, rehearsal rooms, workshops, and offices. The tower is nineteen stories high, the two top stories being devoted to water tanks.

A MUSIC TEMPLE WHICH REACHES THE HEIGHT OF BEAUTY IN APPEARANCE.

Music Temple Inclosed or Open Air

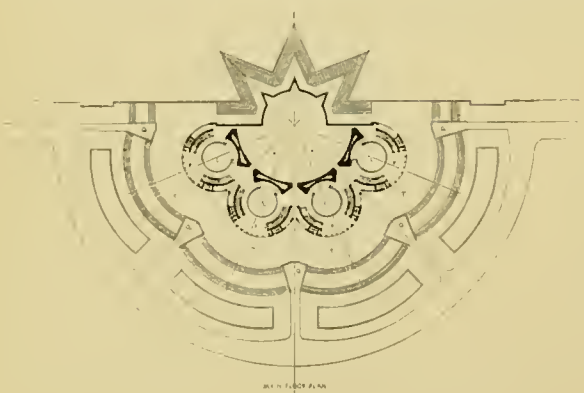
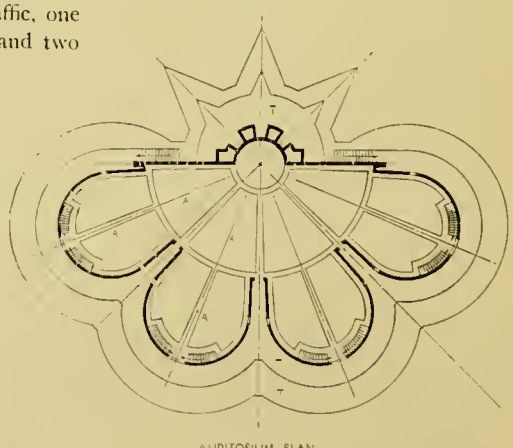
TEN THOUSAND MAY BE SEATED UNDER THIS UNIQUE PLAN

AN auditorium for audiences of various sizes, that may be inclosed or open air, with a tower for carillons, rehearsal rooms, studios, offices and dressing rooms.

AUDITORIUM: The auditorium has a seating capacity of 10,200 persons on its single floor level and is capable of seating an orchestra of 200 pieces and a chorus of 600. It is built in four sectional units. Each section is inclosed by its own dome so designed that it can roll back on itself, thus making an open air building. Movable partitions and portieres close off the various portions of the auditorium reducing the size of the audience by degrees down to as low as 1,200 people.



Each section of the auditorium has its own entrance foyer, box office and lounge. These entrance foyers are at the middle point in the rake of the auditorium floor; and open out on a wide common terrace. The lounge rooms are circular, sunk slightly below the level of entrances.



THE STAGE: The stage is a semi-circle and is inclosed by a half dome.

GENERAL NOTES: In addition to the entrance terraces there are two marquees that serve as exterior promenades projecting from the auditorium at two different levels.

The first two floors of the tower, those of the star-point design, house the rehearsal rooms. The center tower houses the carillons, while the rest of the tower space is devoted to offices, dressing rooms and studios. The basement under the auditorium is an entrance and parking space for 1,720 automobiles. There are two double lanes of incoming traffic, one double lane of outgoing traffic, and two single lanes of outgoing traffic. In this way there is a continuous stream of traffic circulating about each of the four entrances, making it possible for one hundred cars to unload per minute. In addition each of the three points of the tower at the water level forms a landing dock for those arriving by water.

The diameter of the semi-circular stage is 160 feet. The longitudinal axis of each of the four lobes of the orchestra is 288 feet. The diameter of each of the four circular lounges is 63 feet. The main entrance is 72 feet wide. The first marquee is 56 feet wide and the second 24 feet wide. The tower is 256 feet high. From the stage floor to the half dome above is 63 feet. The vaulted roof rises 120 feet above the water level.

AUDITORIUM PLAN

An Intimate Theatre

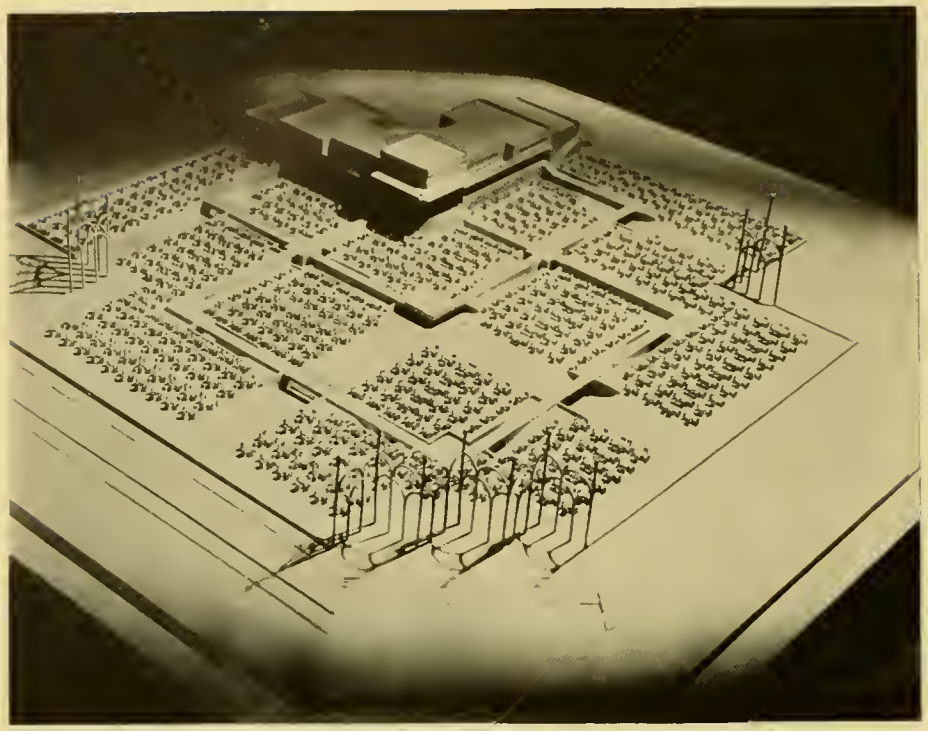
THEATRE Number 14 is a small intimate theatre with the audience seated in a circle around all sides of the stage.

STAGE: The stage, designed on the same principle as a European circus or a boxing ring, is circular and in the center of the building. Separating the stage from the auditorium are steps which form an apron and an approach to the stage for actors. Scenery would be restricted to what is commonly termed properties, that is, objects such as furniture.

Under the auditorium on the ground floor are the dressing rooms, each with a shower and outside window. These rooms radiate from a passage around the stairs leading to the assembly room and the stage.

BASEMENT: The basement contains storage space for scenery and properties. All scene changes are made in the basement. The scenery is set on two movable stages which are raised and lowered by hydraulic power. In their elevated position at the auditorium level they form the acting stage floor. One stage is being set while the other is being "played"; the substitution, which takes a few seconds, is made behind a curtain of light or a moment's blackout. The stage when lowered descends into a shallow pit which brings its floor level with the basement floor. The stage is carried from its original position to one side—a distance equal to its diameter—on tracks. The second stage, already set for the next scene, is automatically rolled into position and raised to the auditorium level.

LONGITUDINAL SECTION



THE AUDIENCE IS SEATED IN CIRCLE FASHION IN THE BUILDING WITH THE STAGE CENTERED DIRECTLY.

AUDITORIUM: The auditorium has a capacity of eight hundred people. It is circular, surrounding the stage, has no balcony, and is only six rows deep. It is cut by eight transverse aisles, but each tier of seats becomes an aisle by reason of the wide interval—four and one-half feet—between one chair back and the next. By this arrangement each seat has plenty of leg room and also commands an excellent view of the entire stage. Because each seat is equally "the best in the house" the revenue from these 800 seats (all at the top price) is equal to that from twice the number at the usual sliding scale.

Surrounding the auditorium is a board promenade with windows. Projecting from the promenade is an upstairs lounge, to either side of which are retiring rooms. An outdoor terrace is cantilevered above.

ADMINISTRATIVE OFFICES: These are on the ground floor and consist

Open-Air Cabaret

AT several positions in the Exhibition Grounds, large restaurant areas must be located to handle the immense crowd, all of whom will want to eat at approximately the same hours. The plan is for a large open air cabaret that seats 2,500 people—an American "beer garden."

MAIN BUILDING: The main entrance is a three-story building containing: lounges for men and women, offices, dressing rooms for entertainers, rooms for electricians and mechanics, kitchens and pantries.

STAGE: Directly in front of the building is a small quadrant shaped stage from which runs a continuous platform five feet wide, and at an average height of four feet above the ground floor level, in the form of two interlacing squares. The sides of this platform are walled up and it forms the stage "apron." The performers, that is, singers, jugglers, acrobats, monologists, chorus or band, enter from the stage quadrangle and

AN open air theatre for water pageants built on a group of anchored barges in a lake, with the stage separated from the auditorium and entirely surrounded by water.

AUDITORIUM: The auditorium seats two thousand people. There is additional area for 500 canoes (these are the choice seats) bringing the total capacity to 3,500 people. Three main aisles divide the auditorium into five main sections. In addition there are outside aisles and a promenade at the back of each section. The two side sections rise from four feet to thirteen feet above the water level; the two center sections rise from four feet to twenty-two feet above the water level. In the rear of each section are wide flights of stairs leading down to the landing docks. To the sides and rear of the auditorium radiate piers supplying dock facilities for seven hundred and sixty-eight small boats simultaneously. At the rear of the auditorium, are the lounges and toilets for men and women.

CANAL: Separating the auditorium from the stage is a canal sixty-four feet wide, a portion of which is roped off for five hundred canoes from which the occupants can watch the pageant without landing. At either end of this canal are traffic towers to control the movements of canoes.

Here's COMFORT Plus –

Almost any kind of a chair is good enough to sit in for five minutes—but two hours—that's another matter. It's a matter that makes personal comfort one of the showman's best bets on steady patronage. Theatre seats have to be roomy and properly shaped. They must be sturdily constructed and have silent, durable hinges. The fabrics used for upholstering need color and pattern in endless variety in addition to super-wearing strength. Such standards as these are embodied in the construction of every theatre chair made by the Steel Furniture Company. Their exclusive selection for distribution through National Service is of itself indicative of their exceptional merit. And here's another thing . . . Theatre chairs, regardless of fine workmanship, must be installed correctly. A good chair set at the wrong angle is no longer a good chair as far as its occupant is concerned. National Service does more than sell the finest of theatre chairs—it assures expert installation. It gives the exhibitor comfort plus! New prices now apply on National Theatre Supply Company seating. Each of its thirty Branches offer a wide selection of chair styles for every class of theatre and each style is outstandingly the best buy on the market today.

Equipment and Its Relation to the Motion Picture Theatre's Success

An Authority Discusses the Modern Trends in Theatre Operation, Particularly in Their Relation to Equipment As a Source to Public Patronage

By J. HARRY TOLER

I OVERHEARD two exhibitors talking shop the other day and the conversation ran something like this:

First Exhib: "Well, Bill, how's it going these days?"

Second Exhib: "Terrible. Never saw it so tough since I've been in the business. If this keeps up I'm going to walk away and leave it. How's it with you?"

First Exhib: "Oh, I can't kick. Could be better of course but do you know, since I spent a little 'jack' on my house; fixed it up a bit, I've noticed a gradual improvement. Look's like business is going to continue improving over at my place."

Thus a little innocent eaves-dropping inspired some thoughts on prosperity and what is most needed to produce it.

By what authority I may assume to discuss the subject of theatre prosperity is certainly of secondary importance to the subject itself—a subject that has been of very grave concern to many theatre operators during the past year and a half.

The show business seems to be fraught with difficulties for those exhibitors who with inferior equipment and unattractive house environment are trying to hold their patronage with little more than the help of average screen entertainment.

Every showman knows that of the total number of pictures he may run in the course of a year, comparatively few are of high calibre box-office value on their own account. A lucky break might give him one or two attractions of the box-office knockout variety. Those, of course, might profitably attract the public even though they were screened in a barn. But the reasoning must be confined to the average—not to the exception.

At best, the larger percentage of his pictures will be above the average, but it is a reasonable and therefore safe assumption that at least 50 per cent of them will be judged by the public as no better than the average—each just another picture.

How then may any exhibitor expect to consistently maintain a profitable pace with inferior equipment in an uninviting theatre? Merely add to the normally expected disadvantages of average screen entertainment the indisputable disadvantages of worn-out projectors, uncomfortable seats, poor lighting, unsuitable acoustics, bad ventilation, and unattractive atmosphere and you have conjured a fairly accurate perspective of what false economy may lead to.

Theatre Must Aid Draw

The physical value of an attractive, clean, well-equipped theatre is definitely definable. Does the theatre attract patronage—or is the burden of attraction carried principally by the screen? The former is certainly more conducive to permanent prosperity because the many prospective patrons will passively avoid average, or even better than average, screen entertainment if they know that they must undergo physical and mental discomforts in order to get it.

So it seems to me that now is a most propitious time for the whole industry to do some double checking and self-analysis, emphasizing in our deliberations the true relationship of equipment to the success of the theatre.

What I say may sound like equipment sales talk. If it doesn't I've missed my mark, because I certainly intend to sell the idea that prosperity in any business these days isn't handed out on silver platters. It comes only to the man or group of men who are willing to provide those things which insure success and prosperity.

Industry Can Correct Ills

Is there anything basically wrong with the business of exhibiting motion pictures? It may be argued that business will never again be what it used to be; it may even be proved in some instances that the game (and it is a game) is no longer profitable except for a favored few, but I seriously doubt that there is anything wrong with the business that cannot be corrected within the industry itself, through the initiative of those who have made and will continue to make it an industry worth while.

Public entertainment, through the medium of motion pictures, can no longer be classed as a "penny arcade" business; the transition from the museum class with its circus methods of operation and exploitation has been accomplished and it is now a legitimate, up-standing business, highly susceptible to good merchandising methods.

The modern motion picture theatre is indeed a public utility—a necessity in the economic and social welfare of every community. Is it not, therefore, good business to provide our theatres with modern refinements that appeal to public sentiment?

I address these thoughts particularly to those exhibitors located in the smaller towns—the Main Street centers of the country—who seem to have borne, altogether patiently, more than their share of what many have termed "a serious depression" at the box-office.

It is my honest belief that hard times, politics, stock market declines, crop failures, midget golf courses and all those counter attractions and bugaboos which showmen have been talking about, are less responsible for a decline in theatre patronage than a mistaken attitude on the part of too many exhibitors. Too many have said "My theatre is good

Toler has introduced many universally used equipment products into the theatre field, has been a student of theatre supply problems and has had opportunity to gauge the importance of having proper theatre equipment in any and all situations.

Toler entered the theatre field after years of experience in advertising. He was a part owner of the Yale Theatre Supply Co. of Kansas City at the time that organization was taken over by the National Theatre Supply Co. For the last four years he has been advertising and sales promotion manager of National Theatre Supply, and resigned that position only recently to organize his own theatre equipment advertising agency.

It is Toler's belief that modern merchandising methods can and should be applied to theatre operation. In this and subsequent articles which will appear in The Showman he will endeavor to show how good merchandising practices can be utilized to improve theatre business.

Carbon Dioxide for Theatre Cooling; An Exposition of How System Works

Official of Carbon Dioxide Division of Frick Company of Waynesboro, Pa., Describes the System and Lets Reader Draw Own Conclusions

By A. N. CHANDLER

COMFORTABLE indoor conditions are not provided by temperature alone. Humidity and air movement have much influence, and each application is a problem in itself. The theatre, department store and office building differ from each other in the character of work done, kind of occupants, and number per unit of floor area.

In the theatre the audience is still for a period ranging from two to three hours. Of course, people are coming and going at all times but their number is relatively small in proportion to the total number which is seated. People who are sitting still present an entirely different problem from those in a department store where they are moving about. Those in a theatre should feel no draughts or cold air currents. Occupants of office buildings require special consideration. Here there are relatively few in number in each office. They must get a supply of conditioned air of proper temperature and humidity to suit their needs. Each office presents a different problem.

In laying out nearly all air conditioning work, space for the equipment is at a premium. Often it has to be fitted in anywhere regardless of whether it is the ideal place or not. Often it is an afterthought or has to be applied to an existing building, in which case it presents a very difficult problem. Not only is space for the refrigerating apparatus frequently hard to find but to make room for installation of the air ducts is another problem.

Carbon Dioxide Compressors

There are several kinds of refrigerating apparatus which can be applied to air conditioning work. Some of them provide a greater refrigeration tonnage than others per area of floor space occupied. Figure 1 shows an installation of two carbon dioxide compressors placed in a theater near New York City. These require a floor space of 300 sq. ft. and head room of 9 ft.-6 in. Each is the totally enclosed type and has no vertical shaft stuffing box. The stuffing box is of the horizontal rotating type. The compressor is equipped with an oil pump which keeps the bearing under oil pressure of from 400 to 500 pounds at all times. The stuffing box is kept cool by means of a gland in which gas from the suction line is allowed to expand.

Figure 2 shows a cross section of a typical enclosed type carbon dioxide compressor. The thrust bearing takes the crank shaft thrust and equalizes the pressure between the crank case and the atmosphere. It operates at all times under oil pressure.

Each compressor is built with a starting by-pass and safety valve. This valve is of the spring type which blows at 1,500 pounds pressure and repeats when the pressure is relieved from 200 to 300 pounds.

In order to eliminate noise the carbon dioxide compressor and motor are often placed on foundations of cork. In other cases, the foundation is built in a pit which has been lined with cork.

One of the two large carbon dioxide compressors which furnish refrigeration for air conditioning the Newark theatre, Newark, N. J. Double-pipe condensors may be seen in the background

Carbon Dioxide Condensers

One type of $CO_2$ condenser consists of an eight-inch double extra heavy pipe with seven 1½-in. pipes welded into the tube head. The water heads are of cast iron and divide the shell into several water passes. Figure 3 shows a view of such a condenser. These can be arranged any number of pipes high depending on head room available. They can be placed on 18-in. horizontal centers. Each shell can be arranged to take from 20 to 40 gallons of water per minute, depending upon the range of temperatures desired or work to be done. The water leaving the condenser is within a few degress of the carbon dioxide liquid temperature off the condenser.

As an example, an installation requiring 350 tons refrigeration and using shell and tube condensers could be arranged in a floor space 7 feet wide by 22 feet long. Furthermore, this space allows room for carbon dioxide and water headers. On this installation, the head room required would be 11 feet 6 inches.

Another system is a typical carbon dioxide double pipe welded condenser. It is made up of 1¼ inch water pipes throughout. The four top sections are made up of 2½ inch extra heavy pipe and the remaining eight pipes of 2 inch extra heavy pipe. The 2½ inch and the 2 inch pipes are welded to the 1¼ inch pipes at each end. The reason for the larger top section is to absorb the pulsation of the carbon dioxide gas from the compressor which causes a cushioning effect. The water is so arranged that the coolest water comes into contact with the coolest gas, making the temperature of the carbon dioxide liquid off the condenser near the initial water temperature. Figure 1 shows several stands of double pipe welded condensers.

It is the general practice to supply each carbon dioxide installation with an oil separator and scale trap. These are inserted in the pipe lines between the compressor and condenser and in the suction line from evaporator. These vessels are either of welded construction or of cast steel, according to the standard of the manufacturer. The oil separator is always provided with an oil drain valve and with baffles which are perforated for catching and holding oil. The construction of the scale trap embodies a screen for catching any of the scale or dirt coming from the evaporating side.

This trap must be made so that this screen can be cleaned thoroughly at intervals.

Carbon Dioxide Receiver

The next important feature in the refrigeration cycle is the carbon dioxide receiver. This is used to collect and store the liquid which has been condensed in the condenser. The ordinary practice is to provide the receiver with valves for the inlet, drain, and outlet connections. Each receiver should also be provided with a gage glass equipped with automatic shut-off valves in case of breakage of gage glass. A safety valve should also be furnished in case all the valves should close and the liquid grow warm, causing an increase in pressure. The size of the liquid receiver varies, of course, with the size of the installation but it is good practice to have it sufficiently large to hold the major portion of the charge in the system.

Pipe Connections

Another system is a typical carbon dioxide cycle. The pipe connections between parts are most important. General practice today seems to be to make a complete welded job of all the connections, making provision by means of bends for expansion. In carbon dioxide work, all pipe connections should be bent, wherever possible, with a long bend. This gives the gas more of a chance to flow smoothly, and eliminates the chance of vibration in the pipe lines. It must be remembered that in the discharge lines the gas attains a velocity of from 800 to 1,200 feet per minute at a pressure of from 1,000 to 1,400 pounds. Should this gas meet a right-angled bend, it would cause a severe shock which would pass to the hangers and be transmitted to the building.

In all large carbon dioxide pipe work, it is customary to anchor the lines to the floor and to provide cork pads so the shock will not be passed to the building. Elimination of all vibration is a very important factor on air conditioning work.

Water Cooling Apparatus

Air conditioning may require that air be dehumidified by passing it through the cool water sprays and filtering during summer months and used as a humidifier in winter months, at which time the air is preheated and humidified by the water and there tempered before delivery. Many air conditioning jobs are a combination of air conditioning and warm air heating systems. That is, in summer the air is cooled and dehumidified by passing through cooled water sprays and filtered; in winter it is preheated, humidified by water sprays, filtered and tempered.

Water used for spraying and dehumidifying the air may be cooled by several means, such as Baudelot cooler type coils, tank with submerged coils, or with special type coils and agitators.

The Baudelot cooler type construction entails a number of coils, standing vertical, over which water is distributed by means of sprinkler pipes or troughs. The coils are ordinarily galvanized and may have several pipes submerged in a tank. The water is then taken and pumped through nozzles in the dehumidifier. The Baudelot cooler type water cooler involves considerable space and requires an insulated room, which is rather expensive. It does, however, get a greater heat transfer than the plain tank submerged coils.

The tank and coil method of water cooling pertains to submerged coils in a tank. The tank is arranged with baffles to give the water velocity and thereby promote the heat transfer between the water and carbon dioxide gas in the pipes. The water is pumped from the tank to the dehumidifier. The discharge is taken from the tank from one end and returned to the other end.

The third method of water cooling referred to is by means of using special types of coils in a closed tank. This arrangement is adaptable to flooding with carbon dioxide liquid. High heat transfer is often secured with this method by means of special agitators developed for this purpose. By this method, the plant is not dependent on the water pumps for its agitation, and any particular dehumidifier can be operated independently of the other. The cooling units can be arranged so that the amount of water cooled can be varied. Cooling the water independent of the dehumidifier unit

"CARRIER MANUFACTURED WEATHER

Always Cool ▲▲▲ Never Cold"

Simply this . . . and the public found it true. Not a damp coolness, but the healthful comfort produced only by complete air conditioning.

THIS house . . . owned by the Byrd Theater, Inc., and operated by Walter J. Coulter, President . . . has used Manufactured Weather with marked success as a promotion feature, summer and winter.

For the past two summers Richmond people have been drawn to the Byrd, seeking the cool, non-humid comfort which is provided.

The complete Carrier System for Air Conditioning in the Byrd includes an efficient CENTRIFUGAL REFRIGERATION UNIT which makes it possible not only to reduce the temperature, but more importantly to hold down the humidity.

The same system produces an equal degree of comfort in the winter . . . dispelling stuffiness, warming or cooling automatically as demanded by the weather or the size of the crowd . . . cleaning the air and distributing it uniformly throughout the house at all seasons.

Well-informed showmen know that anything less than a complete air conditioning system cannot give patrons the comfort conditions which are now provided by the more progressive houses. They know that satisfactory results cannot be obtained without a complete air conditioning system which must include an adequate and efficient refrigeration system.

The Carrier System is not to be confused with those systems offering only half-way results, and it will pay you to know the many differences. A Carrier engineer will be pleased to consult with you at your convenience.

Lack of Showmanship Ideas Harming Class B Houses; Service Below Par

Oklahoma City Exhibitor Points Out False Ideas of Theatre Operations In Second Run Theatres; Urges Personnel Betterment

By Paul Ketchum

Assistant Manager, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City

FALSE ideas of theatre operation are what cause considerable gnashing of teeth in many managers' offices and more particularly in the Class B houses than any other. The simple case of the Class A manager having to have the right ideas or being eliminated is enough to force him to find them, but such is not the case with the B houses. It is no secret that hundreds of B houses throughout the country are operating without any thoughts at all other than that the doors open at a certain time and the box-office is where tickets are sold.

These houses get by and that is about all. But on the other hand there are many hundreds of B houses that have found that just getting by isn't good business and plenty more profits can be made by managers if they will utilize their desks for something more than a place to rest their feet.

For instance, there's the matter of service—and by service we mean complete service. The common conception of the manager and, for that matter, of the public as well, that B houses are institutions where service is something noticeably absent is another secret that is anything but true.

Service to some managers is something only dispensed by the A houses and they are ardent believers in that. What is more they teach their customers to believe in that principle.

Cashier Choice Important

A so-so dressed cashier, somewhat between a restaurant waitress and a housemaid, generally presides over the ticket booths of such houses. Good looking, neat, well-dressed young ladies are just as easy to get as the opposites and they don't cost a cent more than the others. Why not get them?

Which, to you, is more satisfactory when you're buying something in a store—a shabbily dressed sales person who dispenses your merchandise as a duty or the one who smiles, talks with a laugh in her voice, dresses neatly and looks as though life held something for her; one who gets a genuine pleasure out of waiting on you?

Isn't the girl in the box-office as much of a sales lady as the girl in the department store? Doesn't the impression she makes on your customers count equally as much for you as it does for the dry goods institution?

The goodwill she builds counts plenty. Trial of both types for a period of a month or two is the surest way to find the truth in that.

After the box-office what?

Cleanliness—that's mighty important, no matter what type of house you're running. Cleanliness doesn't mean polished brass door knobs, but a house that is just as clean in the darkest corner as that shining brass door knob. It means an atmosphere of cleanliness and plenty of it; clean walls, and painted walls; bright, clean curtains, shining floors, and cleanliness among employes as well.

Your patrons want that. They come to the theatre to relax from the cares of their tasks and to be entertained; to forget their own personalities in a world of make-believe that they can thrust themselves into by passing your portals. If this world of make-believe is set off in an atmosphere of uncleanliness in any form whatsoever it detracts from their enjoyment—that means they're not going to be the kind of customers they should be. It means they'll come to your theatre but once to every five times they might come otherwise.

The Usher a Key Man

I've had the opportunity of hearing many theatre patrons' woes and also of visiting hundreds of houses. One thing has been always prevalent—the complaint against the occasional broken chair arm or worn out upholstery. Naturally this won't be found in the first run houses but it will be found, and to a great extent, in the second runs.

But what of the other factors of service? What about the usher, that all important unit of any house?

A lot depends on him. By a cross word or an indifferent attitude in seating a customer that young man can create ill-will that will cost the house hundreds of dollars to regain. He is a mighty important unit, but few second run houses realize that.

For instance, having him dressed in uniform, a clean, neat, attractive, West Point type of uniform that cannot help but make him feel proud of his position and create an impression on the patron that cannot be forgotten.

Does he walk straight, with shoulders square and head up, or does he slide down the aisle on his heels, come to a stop in front of a chair and slouch there until the patron arrives, left to find his or her seat?

He should be every bit as courteous as if he were working in a million dollar first run house. He waits for the customer to arrive, with a dimmed flashlight he shows the way to the seat, he asks pardon if an individual passes and he thanks not only the customer but the persons who were inconvenienced in the move before he leaves. He doesn't leave either the new arrival or the seated patron in an ill frame of mind. By a few good words, the right tone of voice and the proper action he can make these people glad to be put to the inconvenience of permitting the customer to pass. Inconvenience should be reduced to its minimum even if it cannot be eliminated.

These are just a few things. There are many others. It is a mattter of common opinion that second run house customers don't care about service. It's true in some respects, but not with the patrons who mean steady profits. The man or woman who comes again and again to your theatre is the one whom you must give this courteous service to. If you don't he or she will go somewhere else.

Consider for a moment a bit of logic. Why do people go to first run houses? Simply because they see pictures that are up-to-the-minute, because they are made as comfortable as it is possible to make them and because they are given the acme of courtesy.

There are hundreds of individuals to whom timeliness in a picture doesn't mean a thing, but entertainment means everything. If a second run house can give its patrons all of those other things the first run house offers, many hundred additional customers will be brought inside their doors.

The idea that a Class B or second run house need not be a service purveyor in every sense of the word is the false idea that is robbing many theatre managers of profits they can easily obtain.

But the idea that a Class B or second run house need be that in film only is what is getting those extra profits into the box-office.

Service—lots of it—makes success and the adaptation of all the other practical ideas of the first run houses to the second run house is as important. For instance, we were doubtful about billboards, but we tried them with successful results, as with other types of first run advertising.

The idea that all of this on the part of the B manager is nothing more than imitation of Class A houses is a thin one indeed. Fewer desk men and more active men make the B houses a success. After all the entire success of any house is up to its personnel from the porter to the big boss.

New Hazard of Sound Equipment Adds To Need of Vigilance Against Fire

Adequate Exit System First Consideration of Theatre Managers; Fire Drills And "Good Housekeeping" Also of Fundamental Importance

By ROBERT S. MOULTON
Technical Secretary, National Fire Protection Association

THE first consideration in motion picture theatre fire-safety is the exit arrangements. This includes not only adequate exit widths, but the keeping of the exits free and unobstructed, with proper doors, lighting and other details so arranged as to make the emergency egress of the audience possible at any moment. A related feature is the proper drilling of the ushers and employees in fire emergency. Trained employees can under fire conditions do a great deal to assure the orderly exit of the audience and prevent panic. This is well illustrated in the Laurier Palace theatre fire where through the cool-headed work of an usher at one stairway the children in the balcony on that side of the building escaped unhurt, but at the other stairway there was no one to direct the children down the stairs and a jam formed with resultant heavy loss of life.

The most important point of special hazard in the motion picture theatre is in the projection booth, where the projection light or other electrical equipment furnishes a potential source of ignition and the film a readily ignited fast-burning material which gives off noxious and explosive gases in its combustion. In the record of the National Fire Protection Association, there were 284 projection booth fires. It is reasonable to assume that all of these fires could be prevented by proper equipment and proper operation. In the right kind of a projection booth a fire can occur without any spread outside the booth or alarming the audience in any way. The damage to the equipment in the booth may be heavy, but there will be no panic in the audience. Proper construction of booths with fire-resistive walls, doors and shutters over projection ports and peep openings, and above all an adequate vent leading direct to the outside air, is of utmost importance.

Sound Hazards Being Met

Various special hazard fire causes are involved in the use of sound reproduction equipment. Located on the stage, there is thus introduced a new electrical hazard not found in the old silent projection equipment. Many projection screens are of a highly flammable nature and a number of fires, one of them of a quite serious character, have been reported due to the ignition of the flammable projection screen through electrical short circuit or other defects in the sound reproduction equipment behind the screen. The obvious remedy for this hazard lies in the substitution of a non-flammable or slow-burning screen.

Sound insulation constitutes another theatre hazard which was not found a few years ago. Many of the materials used for acoustical purposes are highly combustible and when ignited by any chance spark burn with great rapidity. Considerable attention is now being given to this problem and various acoustical materials are available which do not involve this extreme hazard.

As in the case of fires in other occupancies, "smoking-matches" head the list of so-called common hazard causes. These fires are simply due to carelessness and while perhaps not altogether avoidable owing to the habits of patrons, they may in the main be avoided by a vigilant theatre personnel. Good housekeeping in basements and other portions of the building not visited by the public is another feature of fundamental importance. Many fires start in storerooms, shops and employees' quarters which could well be avoided through more rigid supervision on the part of the management.

Fire-resistive construction of the theatre building is, of course, a matter of first importance. No theatre owner, however, can rest secure from the danger of fire by simply providing a brick, concrete or steel structure. The trim of the building, the decorations and other contents, are all apt to be more or less combustible and even a very minor fire which results in even the slightest wisp of smoke reaching the audience, may lead to a fatal panic.

As in other occupancies, fire extinguishing equipment should always be provided Fire extinguishers and hose should be conveniently at hand for use in time of fire emergency and all the employes should be instructed in the use of this equipment. Automatic sprinkler protection is even more valuable and is largely found in modern motion picture theatres. The automatic sprinkler has the advantage of operating without human intervention and has a fine record of extinguishing fires which have started at times when the building is unoccupied and the fire otherwise would have assumed serious proportions before discovery. In 65 typical fires in motion picture theatres equipped with sprinklers, the performance of the sprinklers has been 92.3 per cent satisfactory. Objection is sometimes made to the installation of automatic sprinklers in the portions of the theatre frequented by the audience on the ground that the opening of a sprinkler head might wet patrons. Experience shows that in a well maintained property the possibility of the accidental opening of sprinklers is so small as to be practically negligible and as far as opening under fire conditions is concerned, it is far better to have the audience wet than burned.

Fire Prevention Week, celebrated throughout the United States and Canada on Oct. 5-11, is the period in which the fire protection fraternity concentrates

What We Have Done for others We Can Do for You

The advent of "Sound" pictures brought various problems to the interior designer and decorator, as well as to the acoustics expert.

Many new materials appeared and the utilization of same for the benefit of "Sound," introduced factors which had to be reckoned with by the artist, in the development of decorative treatment.

As CREATORS and DESIGNERS of DISTINCTIVE INTERIORS, we have taken in hand many such propositions and have worked out beautification plans to the complete satisfaction of our clients, wherein the acoustical factors were harmoniously incorporated into the decorative scheme, without impairing "Sound" effectiveness.

We would like to detail any of these propositions for you. Your theatre may prove to be a parallel to some that we have greatly improved.

Cones or Horns, Which Better for Speakers?

By LOUIS MALTER
Of RCA Photophone, Inc., New York

THE ultimate goal in theatre reproduction of sound pictures is the complete simulation in each part of the theatre of the sound originally impinging upon the pick-up microphone. This goal is at present far from having been achieved, one of the weakest links in the chain between sound striking the microphone and the sound impinging upon the ear of the auditor being the loudspeaker.

At the present time the two chief types of loudspeakers in use in theatres are the cone speaker with directional baffle and the horn type speaker.

In the following discussion the elements which measure the satisfactoriness of a loudspeaker and the influence of these elements in the reproduction obtained from the two types of loudspeakers mentioned above will be considered. The results of certain measurements will be used to explain the quality of reproduction obtained with each type of loudspeaker in theatres.

The extent to which a loudspeaker can deliver satisfactory reproduction is measured by five factors, which may be classed in order of importance as follows:

1—Frequency range.

2—Uniformity of response.

3—Radiation of distribution characteristics.

Loudspeaker Measurements

If the pressure at a great distance from the speaker is measured at various angles with the normal to the mouth of the speaker a continuous curve is obtained. If the intensity along the normal is set equal to unity the curve obtained is defined as the radiation distribution characteristic for the particular frequency at which the measurement is obtained. The family of curves showing the radiout the frequency range is a measure of the quality of reproduction at various angles to the normal. The ideal characteristic is that in which the intensity is uniform for all frequencies throughout the angle defined by the entire audience in a theatre at the center of the speaker mouth and which then falls off to zero very sharply outside this angle.

4—Efficiency.

The absolute efficiency of a loudspeaker is defined as the ratio of the total acoustic power radiated by the loudspeaker to the total acoustic power radiated by an ideal loudspeaker if fed from the same electrical source.

5—Input power capacity.

The input power capacity of a loudspeaker is measured by the value of $\frac{e^2}{4r}$, where $e$ is the maximum open circuit voltage which can be impressed upon the loudspeaker terminals without producing noticeable distortion, and $r$ is a resistance equal in magnitude to the impedance to which the speaker is designed to be connected.

In order to obtain an accurate and absolute comparison between the performance of the "directional baffle type" loudspeaker and the horn type loudspeaker, frequency response characteristics of the most widely used type of directional baffle type loudspeaker and of the most widely used type of horn loudspeaker were obtained in the following way.

Each loudspeaker was placed on the ground out-of-doors pointing directly upward and at a sufficiently great distance from buildings so that reflections from these did not affect the results obtained. A condenser microphone was suspended directly above the center of the loudspeaker mouth at a distance of 20 feet. The condenser microphone was connected to a sound amplifier. The entire sound measuring equipment was corrected electrically so as to possess a uniform over-all frequency characteristic.

The frequency-response characteristics obtained in this manner are correct down to a frequency at which the radiation distribution characteristic of the speaker becomes so broad that sufficient sound is reflected from the ground to interfere with the radiation shooting straight up. In order to obtain the frequency characteristic for the lower frequencies, the speaker is placed along the ground with its mouth pointed towards the condenser microphone, which is placed close to the ground and at a distance of 20 feet from the speaker mouth. In this case the phase difference at the microphone between the direct radiation and that reflected from the ground is negligibly small at low frequencies so that the actual low frequency characteristic is obtained. This low frequency characteristic, however, must be divided by two due to reflection from the ground. (The assumption of practically complete reflection from the ground has been checked by experiment.) The fact that over a certain region (300 to 500 cycles) both methods yield the identical result is a further check on the composite method.

Experimental Results

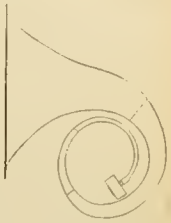
A beat-frequency oscillator and high quality amplifier were used in making the measurements. These were set up indoors and leads run out to the speaker and the bullet amplifier associated with the condenser microphone. The recording mechanism shown of a rapi dand accurate frequency response characteristic being taken in a few moments. A complete description of a similar sound pressure recording mechanism has been previously published.

In order to enable a fair comparison to be made between the frequency characteristics of the two types of speakers the two frequency response curves have been so placed as approximately to overlap in the center of the range, i. e., between 300 and 800 cycles. This has necessitated raising the curve of the directional baffle type loudspeaker. A careful study of these curves enables us to make a competent comparison between the two types of speakers as regards frequency range, uniformity of response and efficiency.



It is immediately evident that the frequency range of the directional baffle type speaker is greater at both the low and high ends of the scale. The cut-off frequencies of the directional baffle type speaker are about 85 cycles and 6000 cycles at the low and high ends, respectively, whereas those of the horn type speaker are about 125 cycles and 5000 cycles, respectively. Thus at the lower end of the frequency scale the directional baffle type speaker has a half octave greater frequency range than the horn type and about one-fifth octave more at the higher end.

As regards uniformity of response the directional baffle type of speaker obviously has the advantage. Between 300 and 5000 cycles the response of the directional baffle type is slightly more irregular, but between these limits the variations in the response of the horn type are greater. Below 300 cycles, however, the horn type speaker is appreciably less responsive than the directional baffle type. As will be seen further, this deficiency in low frequency response in the

Controversial

THE SHOWMAN presents herewith an authoritative discussion of one side of that hotly contested two-sided question: "For power and uniformity of volume over a large area, which is superior, the directional baffle or the horn speaker?"

Air Column Type of Speaker

Both types have their adherents, each supporting his claims of superiority for the type he champions with engineering data and opinion.

In the belief that open discussion offers the surest road to final answer, or at least majority opinion, THE SHOWMAN presents herewith the paper by Louis Malter, of RCA Photophone, Inc., New York, read at the last meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers and reprinted with permission from the Society's Journal, in which advantages claimed for the directional baffle speaker are discussed.

Directional Baffle Type of Horn

Discussions of others supporting the views and facts presented herewith or contesting them by citation of offsetting advantages of the horn type speaker, will be welcomed for consideration by readers of THE SHOWMAN.

Better Acoustics Boost Box-Office; Speech Intelligibility a Big Factor

Public Demanding Better Quality of Sound, Acoustics Engineer Declares; Explains Methods of Controlling Volume

By S. K. WOLFE
Head of Acoustical Dept. Electrical Research

NOW that the box-office is being affected by the intelligibility of speech in the theatre, the exhibitor has become more concerned about the acoustic quality of his theatre. The public is no longer willing to pay for a sound picture that is not intelligible and presently they will be demanding an even better quality than what may be termed as "commercial sound," today. There is still, however, a surprisingly large number of exhibitors who do not appreciate what box-office value better acoustics have.

Sound is a very comprehensive term—it applies to anything that is audible. Since in the theatre we strive for something more than mere audibility, the exhibitor must learn to differentiate between good and bad sound. Speech and music differ in aim as well as in character. Speech is a means of communication while music satisfies a less obvious need. The former is practical and the latter is artistic. Accordingly, speech permits an examination on an efficiency basis. Music is judged by its pleasing quality. The primary consideration of speech is understandability and while tonal quality is very important, it is of a secondary order.

Rating by Percentage

It is the writer's intention to limit the scope of this article to the intelligible recognition of reproduced speech. We can discuss this subject in terms readily understood by everyone, namely, percentages. A theatre can be rated in the percentage of intelligibility of speech which is an index of how difficult it is for the patrons to follow the story from the spoken words.

Telephone engineers have found that a good measure of the efficiency of a transmission system is in the percentage of disconnected, meaningless syllables that can be understood through it. This is called an articulation test.

An articulation test of normal speech direct from speaker to listener under perfect conditions gives 96 per cent. If there is any doubt in your mind that speech cannot be transmitted 100 per cent under ideal conditions, try this simple test. Ask your listener to close his eyes so that he may not read your lips.

Then you say the following words once each—map, Nat, Mack, nap, mat and nack, and ask him to write them down as you say them. Providing you do not unduly emphasize the final consonant of these words, you will find that one or more of them have not been understood. This gives you an idea of the difficulties encountered in speech transmission.

The loudness with which sound equipment is operated is an appreciable factor in the intelligibility of the resulting sound. There is a fairly broad range of volume about equivalent to the volume used in average conversation, for which there is no depreciation in intelligibility. However, as tests have shown, if the loudness is somewhat greater or somewhat less than the conversational loudness, we can expect a reduction of articulation of one to five per cent.

S. K. WOLFE

Extraneous Noises

Another factor influencing the intelligibility of speech is the amount of extraneous noise present. Audience noise is of two kinds. The first includes whispering, coughing, laughing, rattling of programs, etc., and is not controlled by the exhibitor. The other, scuffling of feet on concrete floors, is controllable and eliminated with the use of carpet. Further noise is often introduced into a theatre by and through the heating and ventilating systems, and street noises sometimes enter through this channel. This, too, is controllable. Tests have shown that if the aggregate noise is 20 per cent, as loud as the sound, the articulation will be reduced 10 per cent.

Excessive reverberation is still another factor tending toward decreasing the articulation in the theatre. If, in any given theatre, the reverberation exceeds by two seconds a certain optimum value, a reduction of 10 per cent in the articulation results. It can be readily seen that this condition is often encountered in houses not properly treated acoustically when the audience present is small.

There are two more factors to be considered before we can round out our estimate of the probable articulation of the theatre, and these are the percentage reduction necessary on account of the recording and on account of the reproducing system. Since the articulation rating for speech under the best conditions from the original sound source is only 96 per cent, let us assume that the best possible recording and reproducing would be 95 per cent each.

Sound Ratings

To sum up these reduction factors and to get an idea of how a theatre would rate under the conditions that I have outlined above, we get the following:

|---|---|
| Percentage articulation of original speech under perfect conditions... | 96 |
| *Percentage reduction due to incorrect loudness ..... | 5 |
| *Percentage reduction due to extraneous noise in theatre..... | 10 |
| *Percentage reduction due to reverberation ..... | 10 |
| Percentage reduction due to recording ..... | 5 |
| Percentage reduction due to reproducing ..... | 5 |

*Controllable by exhibitor.

Applying the above listed reductions to to the original 96 per cent in the regular commercial method of applying discounts, we find the resultant percentage articulation to be 67 per cent.

Extensive tests by Dr. Fletcher of the Bell Laboratories have enabled him to draw a curve showing the relation between the percentage articulation of meaningless syllables and the resultant conversational efficiency in which the listener has the aid of context of the sentences in which the syllables are found. From this curve we find that in a theatre having an articulation rating of 67 per cent, the conversational efficiency would be 90 per cent. This means that the patrons would miss about 10 per cent of what was going on, which would keep them under a continuous strain to try to make it out. This strain is perhaps not conscious but does interfere with the ease and comfort of the audience.

Loudness of operation, extraneous noise, and reverberation in the theatre are controllable by the exhibitor in ways described above.

In addition to these measurable fac-

New Question and Answer Department by Ray Belmont Whitman to Protect Interests of Inventors Is Launched in Connection with Regular "Motion Picture News" Patents Department

WITH the continuation of the Patents Department in this month's issue of THE SHOWMAN, Ray Belmont Whitman, patents attorney, launches a Question and Answer Service exclusively for use of readers of MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

The history of many inventors and their projects strongly serves to bring out the lamentable fact that many a dollar of precious capital, and many a month of wasted labor could have been saved, had the inventor only taken the pains to obtain authentic information in regard to the device upon which he was working, or regarding the efforts which others might have already put forth upon the same or a similar device. A full knowledge of the procedure necessary for obtaining patents, or the market for which the device is intended, is likewise important.

The initial series of questions and their answers by Mr. Whitman follows:

Q. 1—I filed a patent application on my invention and afterwards improved it and asked the attorney to change the application accordingly. He said this could not be done. Please advise regarding this.—A. H. D., Raleigh, N. C.

A. 1—Your attorney was correct. New matter cannot be added to an application, as otherwise there would be endless confusion, inventors would get the benefit of several examinations for the one fee and the file would not show a proper filing date for all parts of the application. Your only recourse is to file an improvement application under a new number and date.

Q. 2—Does the Patent Office guarantee the validity of claims in the patents which it issues?—Leo Granger, Bronxville, N. Y.

A. 2—No. The Patent Office merely makes as thorough a search as possible and does the best it can with the facilities it has on hand to prevent the issue of invalid patents. They do a great work as far as their facilities permit, but since any publication anywhere in the world may be used to prove a priority to invalidate a patent they are frequently held invalid on such publications as well as on differences of opinion by the court and the Patent Office as to what is new in the field searched by the latter. Statistics show that patents are held valid and infringed in somewhat more than half of the total cases adjudicated.

Q. 3—After my patent has issued, is it possible to get broader claims in it?—Martin Tracy, New York City, N. Y.

A. 3—Yes. This can sometimes be done by reissuing the patent providing the failure to claim the invention properly was due to inadvertence, accident, or mistake. There are many decisions as to just what constitutes these. Also the application for a reissue must be filed within two years of the issued date of the patent.

New Inventions

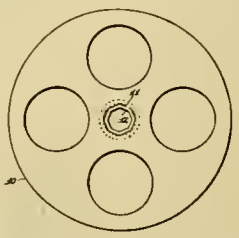
THE records of the Patent Office in Washington are combed by Mr. Whitman for new inventions having an application to motion pictures and are both illustrated and described in THE SHOWMAN as a regular feature.

Mr. Whitman also conducts a Questions and Answers column which imposes no obligation on the reader. All queries on the subjects of patents, trademarks, designs and copyrights fall within the scope of this service. If a personal answer is desired, a stamped envelope should be enclosed with the question. If not, the answer will appear in this department in the first available issue after receipt.

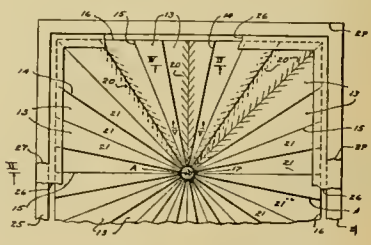
Write on one side of the paper only, giving full name, address and business affiliation. Only initials will be published if so requested. All inquiries should be addressed to Patent Editor, MOTION PICTURE NEWS.



Q. 4—Is there any limit to the number of claims permitted in one patent?—R. F. D., Newport, Rhode Island.

A. 4—No. But recently the Patent Office has put into effect a rule that for every claim originally filed in a case or finally issued in the patent over 20 an additional filing fee, or final fee of $1, must be paid. If the applicant, through his attorney, files a needlessly large number of claims which do not patentably distinguish from one another, the Examiner may reject the case on the ground of "multiplicity." Patents have issued with as many as 389 claims, although the average week in and week out is between six and seven claims. It is interesting to note that the average number of claims in patents taken out through the offices of most advertising attorneys is considerably below the average for all patents above, and that the average of patents issued to the patent attorneys for large corporations is considerably above. For instance, the author served one large corporation nearly six years, averaging throughout the period 25 claims per patent on a large number of cases of all kinds, both simple and complicated. A large number of claims does not always mean greater protection to the inventor, but it often does.

THE Patents Department conducted regularly in this publication embraces new patents on devices used in the motion picture industry. Copies of any of the patents cited here may be obtained by sending fifteen cents (15c) to the Patent Editor for each copy desired.



The current group follows:

Following Colonial Precedence Are the Exterior Lines of Cape Cod's Colony Theatre

New England Converts Old Colonial Church Into a Modern Theatre

By ALBERT EASTON POOR
Architect

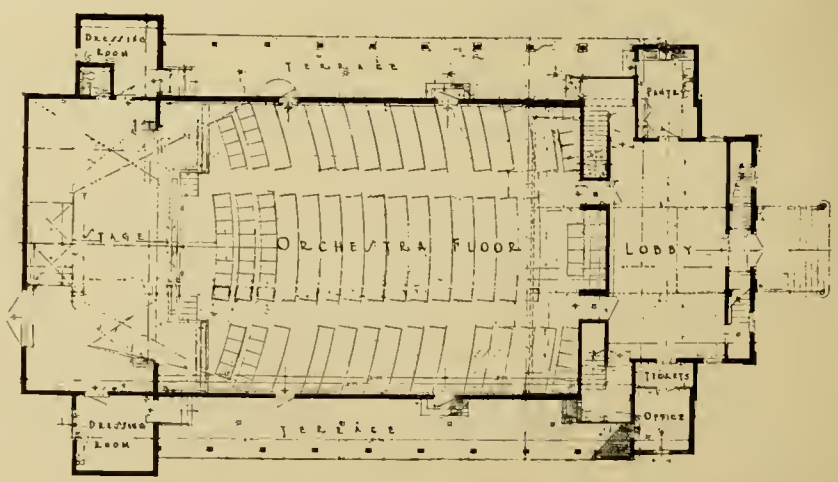
WHEN Raymond Moore, owner of the Cape Playhouse at Dennis in Cape Cod, proposed to add a modern picture house to his group, several interesting problems were presented.

Dennis is one of the oldest towns on the Cape and in consequence the architecture follows colonial precedence. The Playhouse itself is an old Colonial Church converted into a theater. It presents New York shows and first-run pictures in two-week bills and caters to the summer colony of the surrounding district.



Thus, it was determined to give to the new Cinema simplicity to conform to the colonial architecture of Cape Cod and yet be comfortable and luxurious enough to suit a high-type audience. To add to these difficulties it was proposed to cover the auditorium with an ultra modern ceiling decoration painted by Rockwell Kent. Reproductions of this appeared in MOTION PICTURE NEWS for Sept. 6th.

The exterior of the theatre as shown in the accompanying cut follows the precedent of the early Cape Cod church in its simple dignity. The exterior is painted white with green blinds. The arcades along the side are used for serving coffee and tea between performances.

Inside, the lobby was designed to be a transition between the colonial exterior and the modern interior. The lower walls are panelled and painted a warm grey; the upper walls and ceiling are painted a light sky blue. The lighting is concealed in the cornice above the panelling.

The auditorium seats a total of 317. Thirty-eight of these seats are in a shallow balcony at the rear. The chairs are especially designed arm chairs with space enough between rows so that patrons may remain seated and still allow people to pass comfortably in front of them. The chairs are covered in apricot colored suede cloth and the woodwork in lacquered black. The ceiling is in the form of an eliptical vault springing from a high wainscot. This ceiling, representing the constellations, of the sky and the milky way, is in tones of deep blue,

Theatre Illumination

Q. When choosing a dimmer, how shall one determine its capacity? Why?

A. Choose a dimmer having the same rated capacity as the load it is going to control. When the dimmer capacity is higher than the load, the light will not be dimmed out entirely and changes of brightness will be sudden instead of gradual. If the dimmer is of lower capacity than the load it is compelled to carry, the cut-out will occur too rapidly and the dimmer will be burned out in time.

Q. How can one determine the size of letters on inside illuminated signs?

A. The formula for determining the size of letters on a sign is as follows. The greatest viewing distance in feet divided by thirty-six will give the height of the letter in inches. For a viewing distance of 72 feet for instance, a height of two inches for the letters would be necessary. Width of a letter should be 60 per cent of the height while space between letters should be 40 per cent of the height.

Q. In illuminating statuary what must be borne in mind?

A. All statues when illuminated cast shadows. It is important to get the statuary looking as natural as possible. For that reason, illumination should come from two sources so placed that a natural result will be obtained.

Q. Should high wattage lamps be dipped? Why?

A. It is impracticable to dip lamps of 50 or higher wattage because such lamps are generally gas filled and the dip would burn off rapidly.

Q. What is the depreciation in the efficiency of lighting equipment due to dirt?

A. On the average there is a 20 per cent loss in the efficiency of light equipment in a month because of the accumulation of dust and dirt on lamps and reflector surfaces.

Q. What is the best system of cleaning to prevent this depreciation?

A. Wash and clean all lamps once every three months. Have them wiped with a damp cloth once every month. Dry wiping is not very effective and costs almost as much as damp wiping. Do not use it.

Projection

Q. What are the most common carbon defects in projection?

A. Burned out craters caused by too low amperage; blown out core caused by two high amperage; excessive spinkling caused by too much current, or by poor contact between carbon and holders; sputtering at the arc caused by damp carbons, improper set or trim of carbons.

Q. How do these faults spoil projection?

A. Burned out craters result in dark spot on the screen; blown out core results in increased carbon consumption, spot on the screen and spindling; excessive spindling results in flickering light on the screen; sputtering at the arc results in flickering light on the screen.

Q. What remedial steps would result in improvements?

A. Remedy for burned out crater—use a smaller carbon or increase the current. Remedy for blown out core—use less power or use carbon of greater diameter. Remedy for excessive spindling—use proper carbon for specified current and make sure that contacts are smooth.

Q. How should a carbon be tested for breakage?

A. Remedy for sputtering at the arc—dry carbons by placing on top of rheostat. Check up on set and trim.

Copper coated carbons may be broken under coating. Test not by tapping carbon on hard surface but by applying slight pressure with the fingers along entire length of stick. Tapping a carbon spoils it.

Q. What projection defects occur most commonly?

A. Common projection defects are unsteady pictures, poor definition, travel ghost, flicker, distortion, poor illumination, blank screen, improper projection speed resulting in unnatural movement of subject, fuzzy border, and misframes.

Q. What are the causes of an unsteady picture, poor definition, and flicker?

A. An unsteady picture is caused by (a) excessive speed of projection, (b) bent intermittent sprocket, (c) insufficient tension on shoes (d) wax or dirt on intermittent sprocket, (e) film perforation not standard, (f) film shrinkage, (g) improper splicing.

Poor definition is caused by (a) dirty objective lens, (b) incorrect lens system, (c) reflected light from lens barrel, (d) warped film, (e) soft focus film or duplicate film, (f) vibration of projector, (g) haze from wrong type of screen, (h) uneven track on shoe and plate.

Flicker is caused by (a) projection speed too low, (b) light source too strong, (c) unsteady arc, (d) douser not properly timed for change over, (e) iris not properly timed.

Q. What steps would you take to increase illumination on the screen?

A. Clean dirty condensers, check to see if insufficient current, check on correctness of optical system, avoid using dense film, make sure that image of light source does not appear on screen.

Q. What three types of film damage are prevalent?

A. Damage to sprocket holes, scratches on the body of the film, and deliberate mutilation of the film for signal purposes.

Q. What are ten causes of sprocket damage?

A. Improper adjustment of the tension shoes, poorly made splices, damaged film reels, badly notched sprocket holes, the use of old and brittle film, overspeeding, projector parts badly worn, defective mechanism of projector, improper lubrication, and worn or undercut sprocket teeth, dirt on intermittent sprocket causing film in extreme cases to ride on teeth.

Sound

Q. What procedure must be followed when the reproducer needle jumps a groove on the disc?

A. If the needle jumps back the sound will repeat, and may keep on repeating at every turn of the record. If the needle jumps forward the sound will be ahead of the picture. The procedure will depend on the character of the film and the place where the jump occurs. Any record on which the needle has jumped must never be used again, and the reproducer should be checked as soon as possible. Bring the fader to zero as soon as the jump is noticed. The next procedure will depend on circumstances, as follows:

(a) With speech or other sound accompaniment, where exact synchronism is essential. In this case it is not possible to continue without losing synchronism, and there is no option except to continue the programme with the next reel, which is set up on the other machine, or else to cut out the sound for the remainder of the reel.

(b) With music or other sound accompaniment, where exact synchronism is not essential. Keep the projector running and look over the reproducer quickly to see whether there is any visible cause for a jump, such as the reproducer body's dragging on record, or the reproducer's hitting something that prevents it from moving freely. If so, remove the obstacle or change the reproducer. This, of course, involves loss of accompaniment for the remainder of the reel.

(c) If no cause of the trouble is evident, but the needle jumps back, change the needle, move the reproducer over to a position two or three grooves ahead of where it was when it jumped, and restore the fader to its regular setting. If the needle jumps forward and seems to be tracking properly, restore the fader to its regular setting.

Synchronism is lost when a record is continued after the needle has jumped. In such cases, if there are any direct cues in the picture, such as knocks, voices, cheers, etc., the fader must be put down to zero when passing over them.

Q. When do vacuum tubes require replacement?

A. Vacuum tubes require replacement when any one of the three following conditions occur:

(a) When plate currents begin to fall below minimum values. This, of course, applies only in cases where a meter is provided on the amplifier for the purpose of checking such currents. When two or more amplifier tubes begin to show low plate current at the same time the fault probably does not lie in them but may be due to the rectifier tubes. Therefore try renewing the latter.

(b) When the tube begins to be noisy. This statement applies to amplifier tubes.

(c) When the filament shows one or more bright spots instead of glowing uniformly throughout its length.

Tubes that have once been used in a rectifier are unfit for use in amplifiers since they are not capable of giving good quality.

Coloring Exteriors

CHICAGO—outlining of buildings in color lights is being developed by a number of theatre operators. Reco color hoods with holders are particularly suitable for this work, states Reynolds Electric Co., manufacturer and distributor. Reco hoods are used in providing color in auditoriums, for exit lights, borders and footlights. Natural colored glass is used.

Projection, Screens and Theatre Lighting Discussed by Engineers

Installation of Wide-Measure Screens Observed by Progress Committee of Society of M. P. Engineers

SCIENCE continuously points the way to new standards in the field of exhibition. New methods of projection, improvement in threatre designing and lighting, problems offered by wide film and the resultant changeover to wider screens, all are topics of vital importance to every theatre operator. In this article, the second and final installment, the Progress Committee of the Society of M. P. Engineers reports developments affecting technical aspects in the theatre field.

The report lists the source material from which the facts were gleaned, thereby opening the door to additional information by reference to the original. Included in the authorities mentioned there is frequent reference to Motion Picture News and The Showman.

The report follows:

Dahlgreen[203] has given data on a German projector of the suitcase type as "Kinobox C." Light is reflected from a mirror set at an angle of 45 degrees to the film plane and the rotating shutter is positioned between the light source and the film. Descriptions have also been published of two other portable projectors of German manufacture, the "Grawor" and the "Matador."[204] A window display projector uses 35 mm. film and projects pictures 9 inches by 12 inches, which remain 7 to 12 seconds on the screen.[205] The Kohm advertising projector uses a loop of 16 mm. film, 120 meters long.[206]

In the "Speico" automatic projector, the lamp house, motor drive, gate, and lens system are mounted on a horizontal box holding the film which feeds from the center and rewinds from the outside of the roll. The film edges rest on a number of threaded metal cylinders arranged radially around the center of the magazine. One of these cylinders is connected to each of the extremities of a vertical drum for guiding the film from its entrance to its exit from the case and to keep a constant length of film outside of it. Upper and lower sprockets, ventilation of the film, and the lantern, and a humidifying device are features of this projector.[207]

A few patents have been issued concerned with improvements in projector design, methods of utilizing an endless strip of film, etc.[208]

Stereoscopic Projection

Barth[209] prepared a review of the systems for the production of stereoscopic motion pictures. A device for which claims of relief effects were made was demonstrated in Hollywood in November.[210] A standard camera and regular film stock were used. Another apparatus was demonstrated also on the Coast which was paterted in 1915 but was perfected mechanically only recently. Bi-lensed optical systems are avoided and individual viewing frames are said to be unnecessary. Alternate frames are photographed from laterally varying positions (angles), the optical center of the lens representing the pivotal point. A train of motor-driven gears and cams are built into the tripod head.[211] Only two patents were noted dealing with devices for obtaining relief effects.[212]

Non-intermittent Projection

In one type of continuous projector supplied by an English firm, a ring of lenses rotates in the place usually occupied by the rotary shutter. The speed of rotation of each lens corresponds to the rate of travel of the film in the gate in such a way that each lens is maintained central with its appropriate film picture which is thus projected stationary on the screen.[213]

Another non-intermittent type of projector, also manufactured in England, was designed so that the film passes upward through the gate which accommodates two picture frames. Moving parallel with the film and at equal speed is a continuous band of 14 lenses arranged in a channel shaped like the letter "D" the flat side of which is nearest the gate. Two images, or one complete image with parts of two others, are available which, by means of a master lens and an ordinary projector lens, are superimposed on the screen.[214]

A continuous projector designed by a Frenchman, M. R. Huc, has several novel aspects to recommend its consideration. Film is passed on a curved track in the form of a part cylinder before a light aperture somewhat higher than that of a single frame. An image is projected onto a mirror in the center of the cylinder and set at an angle of 45 degrees to the light path. The mirror turns at a speed one-half that of the moving film through a slight arc and then returns to the original position while a shutter cuts off the light momentarily. A stationary image is projected on a screen placed at right angles to the original light source. Means are provided for framing a single picture on the screen.

A projector with continuous movement and using unperforated film on Ozaphane stock has been demonstrated in Paris.[215]

Screens

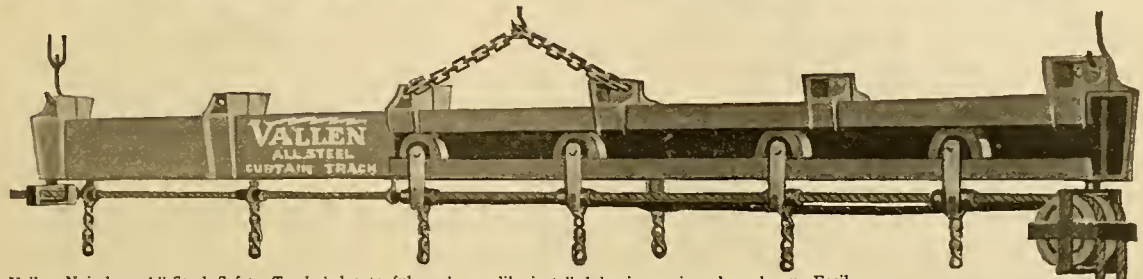
Screens.—Larger screens are generally being installed for standard projection, the size most used in the larger houses on the Coast being 18 feet by 24 feet. Certain producers are planning installation of large screens for the showing of wide films.

A mechanical device operated from the projection booth permits masking the screen to any size needed in three seconds.[217] A sound screen is constructed entirely of asbestos.[218] Another sound screen is made with a glass beaded surface.[219] The screen is fire-proof, may be washed, and rolled up. A screen used by the Film Guild Cinema is stated to be made up with laminated gold and other metals as well as pigments. Arc amperage is said to be lowered 50 per cent by its use.[220]

Some of the ideas patented relating to projection screens are the following: a screen surface comprising agglomerated microscopic spheroidal particles of a considerable range in size; screens having mica dust or finely ground quartz on their display surface, a daylight screen which includes the use of a rayon screen before the regular screen, the former stopping the light falling angularly on the screen; a screen comprising a thin sheet of water dropped through space from a suitable container, etc.

Theatre Illumination.—Paints which fluoresce strongly under ultra-violet radiation have been used to paint costumes and scenery for the production of startling effects.[222] Types of batten spotlights available in Great Britain for stage illumination have been described.[223] Electrically interlocked motors form the connecting link between the control board and the grouped pre-set modulators in different theatre stage lighting circuits.[224]



A new stage and theatre lighting system known as Colorama has been developed by the General Electric Company. It consists of a scheme of cones and flutes with lamps and color media so arranged as to give changing and overlapping color and shadow effects. Glass filters are used instead of gelatin.[225]

Considerable attention has been given the theatre acoustics problem during the year of 1929. One firm has made an acoustical analysis of over 1500 theatres and made recommendations for treatment of the auditoriums. A lowering of the accepted optimum reverberation time as a function of volume was reported.[226] Theatres with square auditoriums were found in general to have better acoustic properties than long narrow theatres. Kellogg[227] stated that the trend will be toward very "dead" theatres in the future with the recording and reproduction arranged to adjust such variables as reverberation and loudness. According to Friend,[228] seats should be made of materials which absorb nearly as much sound as a person. Hair felt and other soft materials which reduce the reverberation have a high selective absorption for frequencies above 1000 and a masking of the audibility of high tones results.[229]

Eyring[230] has shown that the common method of calculating reverberation times

Boosting Kids' Programs

Theatre owners in innumerable spots in every section of the country lay strong emphasis on a series of regular Saturday morning showings for youngsters, in their campaign to build up good will in their community. Always a ticklish problem, particularly where women's clubs are concerned, the showing of pictures to child audiences must be done only under the most favorable conditions. Proper program types spell success or failure for the matinees.

Ryllis Hemington, director of public relations for Fox West Coast Theatres, has prepared a list of subjects favorable for these Saturday matinees. This chart appears regularly in MOTION PICTURE NEWS, with a new group of programs published each week and sufficiently in advance for exhibitors to secure prints of subjects suggested.

Suggested programs for Saturday, October 18th, and Saturday, October 25th, appear herewith.

Equipment and Its Relation to Success

enough for this town" and have let it go at that.

It is my further conviction that the theatre business is now or can be made just as profitable as it ever was, if the theatre owner will MEET COMPETITION. And the greatest competitor he must meet is NATION-WIDE PUBLIC SENTIMENT for refinement in motion picture entertainment. I contend that the public is a competitor because it actually instigates competition by its demands. The small town patron goes to the big town, observes what the big towner is getting in the way of theatre conveniences and comforts, and comes home with a decided preference for metropolitan amusement facilities. What's to be done about it? My idea is—TRY TO GIVE YOUR PATRONS WHAT THEY PREFER.

Obviously it would be foolish to even suggest the establishment or maintenance of a palatial deluxe theatre in a town that could not possibly support it if every man, woman and child could be depended on to put in their appearance at the box-office at each performance.

I, personally, do not favor lavish expenditures for improvements where only modest improvements are justified by local conditions. I strongly advocate the use of conservatism and good judgment in making an investment for profit—and that is exactly what spending money for theatre improvements should be considered.

Does it pay to provide better service in the small theatre? Is it wise to provide comfortable seats and good projection? Is it good judgment to have an inviting theatre front? Is it necessary to protect the health of patrons by proper ventilation? Has cleanliness in the theatre any particular appeal to the public? Is it good business to provide carpets and draperies in the theatre? Does it pay to cater to public taste for refinement? All of these leading questions, and many more just as pertinent, can best be answered by mere reference to the many notable experiences of theatre owners, large and small, who have found the answer to be—"yes, it does."

There are still thousands of medium and small sized towns and prosperous communities throughout the country which could be made to profitably support first-class theatres—houses comparable to those in larger cities, except as to size. Many theatres now serving these communities could be modernized at comparatively low cost—by the addition of those refinements which have a distinct appeal to theatregoers.

You may possibly be the owner of one of these houses. It may represent your sole source of livelihood—a business you have built up through hard work and sacrifices. In any case you have an investment worth protecting against the liability of declining business due to lack of needed improvements.

To those who want prosperity and protection against the onslaught of competition, and are willing to provide a definite means to that end, there seems to be at least one solution that is highly worthy of consideration. Fix up the theatre. Make it modern.

It is not wise to disregard public sentiment. The successful showman knows well enough the penalty he will pay for neglect or procrastination in catering to public taste. The negative reaction at the box-office comes suddenly and the wise exhibitor keeps his finger constantly on the public pulse.

For no other reason whatever than to profitably lure the fancy of the populace, leading theatre operators have created a demand on scientists, engineers and manufacturers for refinement commodities which until recently were considered, if considered at all, in the light of unnecessary extravagance. But the remarkable success examples set by many of our foreseeing showmen have proven that teaching the theatregoer to like refinement and then giving it to him is decidedly good sound business practice.

Developments Available to All

This practice, and the undeniable benefits to be derived from it, is not withheld from individual or independent theatre owners. As a matter of fact, the mechanical developments of the equipment industry are available to all. Their correct application is no longer a grave problem of high cost, because leading manufacturers have foresightedly provided many short cuts to economy by the extension of service that leads to economy in the modernizing of any theatre regardless of its size.

Architects, engineers and others are collaborating in a campaign for better theatres, rather than more theatres. A period of reconstruction is under way. Ways and means have been developed whereby even small theatres which have become "dull drab" by comparison in the eyes of the public, may be recreated at normal expense into profitable plants that become the pride of their neighborhood overnight. The sudden public response at the box-office of these deluxe houses is ample evidence that it pays to spend wisely for improvement.

In other articles of a series to appear in a later issue I will, in collaboration with an architect who has been highly successful in remodeling and moderninzing small theatres, discuss point by point, the many new and effective methods which others are using and by text and illustration show how they have gone about the job of bringing the old theatre up to date to make it pay.

We'll try to make it interesting.

of efficiency. His prime interest from the point of preparedness lay in the navy, for he realized that a nation situated as the United States should have a navy of sufficient size and effectiveness. HALLOWE'EN OR ALL HALLOW'S EVE (Oct. 31).

"There is probably no folk holiday which has taken a stronger hold upon the popular imagination than that celebrated on the evening of October 31st. The name means hallowed, or holy, evening, the eve of All Saints Day.

"Hallowe'en is really an autumn festival as May Day is a spring festival. But peasant superstitution robbed the holiday of its original meaning and surrounded it with the delightful mystery of ghosts, witches, spirits and hobgoblins. And because of these superstitious notions, Hallowe'en appeals to the public fancy and all its old customs and traditions have remained.

"The ancient Druids had a great autumn festival which commenced at midnight, October 31st, and lasted throughout the following day, November 1st. Among other things, they believed that on this night the great lord of death, Saman, called together all the wicked souls that had been condemned within the past 12 months to inhabit the bodies of animals. Because of the wicked spirits that prowled about on this night, they made huge bonfires and kept a sharp lookout. Thus it is unquestionably from the Druids that we derive the belief that witches and ghosts walk abroad on Hallowe'en—a belief still prevalent among rural peoples in Europe.

"The Romans also had a festival about the first of November which was in honor of Pomona. Nuts and apples, as tokens of the winter store of fruits, were roasted before great bonfires. It appears that the Druidic ceremonies and the Roman ceremonies were grafted, one upon the other, to become our Hallowe'en. . . . It became a general and widespread notion that ghosts and spirits walked abroad on Hallowe'en. Peasantry gathered together on that evening of October 31st, built great bonfires to keep the spooks away and shudderingly told one another of queer noises, strange flutterings, trembling shadows. And they tempered their fears with feasting. They brought out their winter stores of nuts and apples."—Eichler.

There was a similar uniformity in the fireside customs of this night through the British Isles as described in Burns' poem of "Hallowe'en." This is no season in the year so marked by fun, both for grown-ups and children as this one. In some sections of this country the spirit of rowdyism in a measure has superseded the kindly old customs, but with the growth of civic spirit Hallowe'en may be made an occasion of good natured revelry.

As Hallowe'en was originally an autumn festival, many of the community customs described for a harvest festival are equally good for its observance.

A Hallowe'en party with decorations, costumes, entertainment and supper has come to be the more usual way of observing the day, both for large and small groups.

Better Acoustics Boost Box-Office

tors there is another that has an appreciable place in show psychology, illusion. The sound must appear to come from the picture and yet the listener must be allowed to feel that he is in the same room with the speaker. With present day recording the areas around and immediately in back of the horns should be sound reflecting, which allows the "room tone" of the recording to become associated with the "room tone" in front of the theatre so that the listener unconsciously feels that he is in the same room with the speaker.

With so many factors bearing upon the net result, each presenting its reduction factor however small, it behooves the exhibitor who wishes to preserve and increase his success, to see that all reduction factors within his control are kept to the absolute minimum.

The best possible equipment obtainable, properly operated in a theatre that is acoustically correct and free from extraneous noise, is the only possible answer to "easy listening" and increasing receipts.

tends to give the plant flexibility and is adaptable to automatic humidity control.

Still another arrangement for cooling water is that of installing direct expansion carbon dioxide coils directly in the spray chamber of the dehumidifier. The carbon dioxide is expanded in the coils and the water is sprayed over them and thus cooled. The ail is blown through the water and thus cooled and dehumidified at the same time. This arrangement results in a saving of floor space for the water cooling unit; the dehumidifier must be increased in size to accommodate the coils.

The method of distributing this cooled and dehumidified air depends on the type of building involved.

Projectionists' Round Table

By John F. Rider

IF the theoretically perfect inductance consumes no power, yet limits the flow of current through the circuit, what is the effect of a practical form of inductance consisting of inductance and resistance.

A. C. Circuit Containing Inductance and Resistance.—We know from past work that the presence of a resistance in any circuit displays a controlling effect upon the current in that circuit. We have found that the reaction due to the presence of an inductance in an A. C. circuit will also display a controlling effect upon the current in that circuit. Suppose that we consider these two forces in one circuit and note the effect. Since both resistance and reactance are oppositions to the flow of current, the combined effect is going to be the total hindrance or IMPEDANCE of the circuit.

Suppose that we have the units shown in figure 62D, arranged as shown. The resistance R of 10 ohms is in series with an inductance L of 10 henrys. The combination is connected across a 60-cycle circuit with an alternating voltage E of 100 volts. According to the law for series circuits, there is only one path for the current in this circuit and whatever the value of this current, it flows through the resistance and the inductance. According to equation 62

and $R =$ ohms

To determine the current in the circuit we cannot add $X_L$ and R because of the phase relation between the current and voltage through the resistance and the inductance. They must be added vectorially to determine the total hindrance or impedance. Therefore

 When the reactance is equal to many times the resistance, so that the ratio between the resistance and the reactance is very small, or when the ratio between the reactance and the resistance is very great, as in this case, 377: 1 it is customary to employ the reactance value as the impedance value, where $X_L = Z$. Thus in the above example, the total impedance inclusive of the resistance is between 3770 and 3770.5 ohms, making the value of R negligible with respect to its current limiting action.

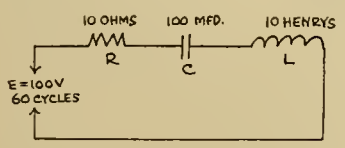

FIG. 63 A

If we say that

then $I = \frac{100}{3770} = .0265$ ampere

This value of current flows through the resistance R and the reactance $X_L$. There are then two drops in the circuit, the IR drop and the $IX_L$ drop.

$IR = .0265 \times 10$
$= .265$ volts
and
$= 99.9$ volts

These values of voltage would be indicated upon A.C. voltmeter connected across the resistance R and the inductance L, respectively. However the sum of these two voltages is not equal to the impressed voltage. The voltage applied is the vector sum of the voltages across R and L, thus

$E_{app.} = \sqrt{(1R)^2 + (IX_L)^2}$

The power factor of the circuit is

and $\theta = 89° 5' = 89.85°$ lag on the part of the current ***

The difference of .15° representing about 9′ is due to the presence of the resistance R. If we consider that the resistance of the inductance L is 10 ohms and it has no other resistance, then the unit may be classed as being practically perfect. The power in the circuit is

It might be well at this time to consider another case of an inductance in series with a resistance, wherein the effect of the resistance is more pronounced. The circuit remains as in 62D, except that the value of the resistance is 1000 ohms and the value of the inductance is 1 henry. Then and $X_L = 377$ ohms

and
$= 1069$ ohms ***

 The effect of the reactance is less than that of the resistance, with respect to the total impedance.

Theatres and Electrics

The effect of a resistance in series with an inductance and impedance of A.C. circuit with restistance and inductance, highlight John Rider's current lesson in the theatre sound projection course, which appears every week in MOTION PICTURE NEWS, exclusively.

Further discussions in this article involve A.C. circuit containing resistance, capacity and inductance in series, and the relation between frequency, capacity, inductance and reactance.

A thorough investigation of the topics concerning series resonance, voltage step-up in series resonant circuit and application of series resonant circuits conclude this installment.

$$I = \frac{100}{1069} = .0935 \text{ ampere}$$

then
$IR = 93.5$ volts and $IX_L = 35.25$ volts

The power factor of the circuit is

$$\cos\theta = \frac{R}{Z} = \frac{1000}{1069} = .935$$

and
$\theta = 20.7°$ current lag

The power in the circuit is

$P = E \times I \times \cos\theta = 100 \times .0935 \times .935$
$= 8.74$ watts
also $P = I^2R = 0935^2 \times 1000$
$= 8.74$ watts.

A.C. Circuit Containing Capacity, Inductance and Resistance in Series—We have noted certain significant facts about resistance, capacity and inductance employed in A.C. circuits and have combined resistance and capacity and resistance and inductance. Let us now combine resistance, capacity and inductance into one circuit as in figure 64. When three such elements are in one circuit, we encounter three states of phase difference, across the resistance, across the capacity and across the inductance. Across the resistance the current and voltage are in phase. Across the capacity the current leads the voltage by 90° and across the inductance the current lags the voltage by 90°. Since the phase difference across the condenser and the inductance are directly reversed, there must be some reaction due to this difference when these two elements are combined in one circuit. If we recall a definite state in connection with current and voltage reactions in capacitative and inductive circuits, we can appreciate the relation between the voltage across the capacity and the voltage across the inductance.

Suppose that we take as the basis the state of maximum current in the circuit. At that instant the voltage across the resistance will be maximum since E and I are in phase. However, the currents leads the voltage across the capacity by 90 degrees and when the current is maximum the voltage across the condenser will be zero. Then again, the current lags the voltage across an inductance by 90° and when the current is maximum and voltage across the inductance is zero. Continuing, when the current is zero through the capacity of the inductance, the voltage across the capacity is maximum and the voltage across the inductance is maximum. However, because of the respective phase relations, these voltages are acting in opposite directions and can be shown as in figure 63B. $IX_L$ is the voltage across the inductance L. The curve $IX_C$ shows the voltage across the condenser C and the

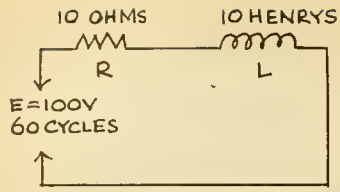

FIG. 62 D

IR curve shows the voltage across the resistance R. The voltage E is that applied. The fact that the current I is not in phase with the voltage E is due to the presence of the capacity and the inductance.

Now each of these produces its own reaction and if the reaction effect of the capacity is the opposite of that of the inductance, these two will tend to neutralize each other. This can best be comprehended by associating the reactance value with the phase relation. Both the capacity and the inductance possess reactance but their actions as far as the control of current is concerned is opposite. Hence if the two reactances are equal, they cancel. If they are not equal, the arithmetical difference between them is the natural resultant reactance. Which two is greater in reactance is of no consequence as far as the value of the current is concerned. The effect is a matter of the final phase relation between the current and the voltage in the circuit. The phase relations of the individual units remains unchanged but when considered collectively, the lag or lead of current depends entirely upon the relative magnitudes of the capacity of inductance reactions. As to the relation between capacity and indoctive reactance, it is customary to affix a plus sign to the inductive reactance and a minus sign to the capacity reactance. Thus when both are in one circuit, the difference is secured by subtracting the capacity reactance from the inductive reactance.

$$X_C = \frac{1{,}000{,}000}{6.28 \times 60 \times 100} = 26.52 \text{ ohms}$$

and

$$X_L = 6.28 \times f \times L = 6.28 \times 60 \times 10 = 3770 \text{ ohms}$$

The total impedance Z when resistance, capacity and inductance are in series in a circuit

$$Z = \sqrt{R^2 + (X_L - X_C)^2}$$

$$= 3743.5 \text{ ohms}$$

Once again we need not consider the value of the resistance R, since it is a very small fraction of the total reactance. If considered it would make necessary two decimals in the value of the final impedance.

The current

$$I = \frac{100}{3743.5} = .02673 \text{ ampere}$$

Then

$$IR = .02673 \times 10 = .2673 \text{ volt}$$

and

and

The impressed voltage E is then equal to

The total power factor is

$\theta = 89° 50.5'$ current lag because the inductance predominates.

Relation Between Frequence, Capacity, Inductance and Reactance—We know that the reactance of a condenser may be varied by changing the freqcency or the capacity. Also that the reactance of an inductance may be varied by changing the frequency or the inductance. The extent of such variation and the relation between the two reactances with respect to frequency is shown in figure 64. Here we show the variation of capacity reactance and inductive reactance with respect to frequency. Note that Xc decreases with each increase in frequency and that $X_L$ increases with frequency. At one value of frequency, capacity reactance Xc = inductive reactance $X_L$. Such a state is found to exist for any values of capacity and inductance when they are combined in one circuit. In other words $X_L - X_C = 0$. Suppose that we take a circuit such as that shown in figure 63A and maintain E at 100 volts and R at 10 ohms. C is changed to 70.4 mfd and L is .1 henry. The frequency of the line supply remains at 80 cycles. Then

$$X_L = 37.7 \text{ ohms}$$

The total impedance

$$= \sqrt{10^2 + (37.7 - 37.7)^2}$$

In this case the two reactances cancel since they act in opposite directions and are equal and the impedance

$$Z = \sqrt{10^2} = 10$$

As is evident the impedance Z is in this case equal to the resistance R and the current

$$I = \frac{E}{Z} = \frac{E}{R} = \frac{100}{10} = 10 \text{ amperes}$$

Hence we find a state in A. C. circuits where the formula for the current is ordinary Ohm's law as it is applied to D. C. circuits. We found that such a condition existed when the circuit was purely resistance. Here we find such a state even with capacity and inductance in the circuit. The reason for the above is that since the reactances cancel, they have no effect upon the current in the circuit, and the current is limited solely by the resistance. Such is the case at resonance and resonance exists when $X_L = X_C$. If we continue to solve for the voltages in the circuit we find a very peculiar condition, encountered only in series resonant circuits.

Solving for the respective voltage drope we find that

The fact that a voltage stepup is secured in a series circuit at resonance is very evident. With an applied voltage of 100 volts, the voltage across the capacity is 377 volts and across the inductance is likewise 377 volts. If the value of R is reduced to say 1 ohm, the current increases to 100 amperes and the voltage across Xc becomes 3770 volts and the same across the inductance. Thus it is possible to build up dangerously high voltage in series resonant circuits. The fact that such a condition occurs is utilized in practice and at the same time also causes trouble in practice. more will be said about such actions later.

Now, referring again to the original example, the high voltages are to be found across the individual units, but since, as has been explained these voltages act in opposite directions, the total voltage across the two elements is because

If a voltmeter were connected across the coil only it would indicate 377 volts and the same is true of the capacity, but if a voltmeter were connected across the two outside terminals of L and C the voltage indication would be zero, assuming perfect capacity and perfect inductance.

On the other hand the total voltage drop takes place across the resistance R and the power in the circuit is dissipated across this element.

Application of Such Series Resonant Circuits—The series resonant circuit finds extensive application and the paramount item which must be remembered is the impedance relation at resonance. Expressed in the simplest manner, this is as follows:

Series resonant circuits possess low impedance at resonance.

This becomes evident if we consider the elements L and C and imagine that R is omitted. Then the impedance Z is theoretically zero and the current would rise to an infinite value. Such is, of course, impossible because all electrical units possess some resistance.

The power relations and total variation of reactance with frequency shall be discussed in lesson 20.

Blend Light and Sound in Console

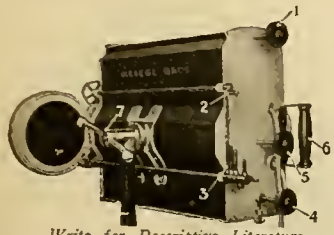
East Pittsburgh—Blending of sound and light through the "color console" has been accomplished by engineers of the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Co. One of the consoles is being installed in Severance Memorial Hall, Cleveland.

When the musicians take their places beside their instruments, near them, at an instrument resembling an organ console, will sit the director of color effects. Music played will be accompanied by appropriate hues.



The "color console" is provided with 36 individual controls. By means of a remote relay board, it is possible to connect one or more of the 110 circuits to any of the 36 controls. In addition to the individual controls, foot pedals vary the volume, or intensity, of color. Horizontal foot pedals are divided into nine groups so that each pedal controls the effect of four "keys" on the color console. Slanting foot pedals are arranged so that some lights can be dimmed and other lights made brighter at the same time. The intensity of all the lights may be varied by a master control.

Color effects made up of combinations of colors are maintained with the same color quality through the entire range of dimming.

It contains the same mechanism as the famous "FIVE POINT" — which is in reality five distinctive devices in one — changeover, eyeshield, framing light, film gate opener and fire gate finger. THE COILS CAN'T BURN OUT.

meander around the "apron" platform, bringing their entertainment into intimate contact with the audience at the tables. The platforms are so designed that a singer on one platform does not interfere with a story-teller on another. Like a circus, there is a continual flow of entertainment.

WAITER'S PASSAGE: Underneath this apron is a runway for waiters, with three sub-pantries at intersectional points. Ramps lead to the under passageway from the floor level of the cabaret. The sinking of the runways for waiters below the level of the ground keeps the waiters from obstructing the view of those watching the entertainment, and keeps food and dishes out of sight most of the time. Waiters may pass one another within the runways.

DINING FACILITIES: The chairs and tables are placed around and in between the platforms. The height of the platform from the ground is great enough so that all entertainers can easily be seen from the furthest seats in the carbaret. The furthest point any diner is removed from the apron stage is a depth of five tables or the equivalent of 12 rows in a theatre.

GENERAL NOTES ON BUILDING: The open air cabaret covers a plot of ground approximately 400 feet square. Of this area 7,000 square feet are taken up by the entrance building, and 65,000 square feet are given over to chairs and tables. tables.

Unique Theatre Planned for Lake

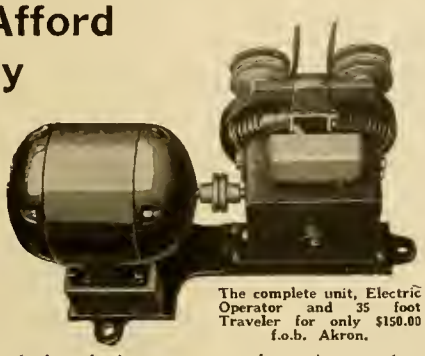
Starting at eight inches above the water the platforms build up like a pyramid to the height of thirty-six feet above the water. On them are towers and walls serving as the backgrounds for the stage and eliminating the necessity of scenery. Surrounding the acting area of the stage are water passages, so that boats may take part in the pageants.

The irregular shape of the stage together with its numerous levels adds a great plasticity to stage direction and variety in ensemble movement.

UNDER STAGE: Underneath the high portion of the stage are three floors or dressing rooms for actors. These include sixteen single dressing rooms for principals with a bath for every two, six dressing rooms each accommodating thirty-six supers, with toilets and showers adjoining, and four assembling areas for the ensemble. Also under the stage are property rooms and an office.

GENERAL NOTES AND BUILDING: The structure is planned to be built on a series of barges that may be locked together in varying combinations that may be changed as desired, and anchored in a lagoon.



The stage is illuminated from flood lights situated to the rear of the auditorium and from side lights concealed on the stage group of towers. Auditorium aisles would be illuminated with lights on the ends of seats on each row. General illumination for the auditorium would be from flood lights located both to the rear of auditorium and on the stage, these latter serving as a "blinder" and replacing a curtain.

The entire water pageant theatre with its docks and canals is 468 feet long on the longitudinal axis and 632 feet wide at its widest point. The auditorium itself is 112 feet deep at the center and 204 feet wide at its greatest spread. From the point of the apron of the stage to the rear of the stage towers is 172 feet; and from wall to wall the stage is 161 feet wide. The towers at the back of the stage are 80 feet high. The average width of the canal dividing the acting area of the stage from the auditorium first row is 16 feet.

is incorrect in some cases. Since theatres are effectively corrected to optimum amount of sound absorption, however, calculations with the old formula will result in correct adjustment in most instances. For sound stage treatment the new method is of importance, as it shows that a very dead set may be obtained by the use of less absorbing material than the older formula would indicate.

The effect of distortion on speech sounds during transmission was discussed by Steinberg.[231] The treatment considered only the effect on articulation and not at all the tonal quality of the sound. Knudsen[232] examined the factors affecting articulation in an auditorium after first discussing the characteristics of speech and hearing.

Lindahl[233] discussed several of the special acoustical problems of theatres from small 200 seat houses to large 5000 seat houses. Hatschek[234] analyzed data on building acoustics of motion picture theatres. Curved surfaces and domes should be avoided, according to Schiffe.[235] Carter [236] recommended lining the ceiling and walls with compressed cane fiber board, to reduce reverberation, and leaving spaces in the walls. The proper adaptation of ceiling design with relation to the rest of the auditorium will provide all the audience beyond two-fifths the distance from front to back with equally clear reception.[237]

Scenery painted on brilliantly colored paper and impregnated against fire may be illuminated either from the front or back and costs less to manufacture.[238] A seating system for theatres consists of an automatic switch equipped to light a lamp at both the end of the row and on a chart in the foyer indicating row and seat number.[239] A box having an illuminated ground glass over which a continuous length of "score" film (photographically prepared) is passed eliminates the necessity for a director of a theatre orchestra and insures easy synchronization with the projected picture.[240] orange, gold and silver. It was painted in New York on canvas strips, trucked up to Dennis and glued to the plaster ceiling. The curtain is a folding screen, worked by an electric motor. It is painted on orange suede mounted on a wooden sound proofed backing and, in its brilliant blue and gold rays, represents the sun.

The diagram above clearly depicts a unique arrangement for the concealment of a theatre safe, as used in the manager's office at the Visalia theatre, a Fox house at Visalia, Cal. The dimensions shown depend, of course, on the type of safe used. However, the essential factor is to have 12 inches reinforced concrete surrounding the vault portion. The space above the concrete portion of the safe makes a convenient location for stationery and office supplies. The outside door to the closet is provided with a cylinder lock that cannot be opened by anyone who comes into the office.

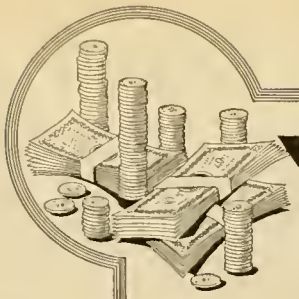
Due to the shape of the ceiling chosen to get the maximum paintable area severe acoustic problems arose. To overcome the conditions of echo the wainscot and the proscenium moulding were covered with acoustic tile. The back wall above the balcony was insulated with acoustic felt. These two insulating materials with the heavy carpeting on the floor gave to the auditorium what the engineers hailed as perfect acoustic properties.



The ventilation was taken care of by an intake fan with ducts over the proscenium and an exhaust fan with ducts over the balcony and under the balcony. Fire protection is by automatic sprinkler. The sound equipment was installed by Western Electric. The proscenium opening was designed of sufficient width to take care of the future "Grandeur screen.

The stage was designed with footlights, space for orchestra, etc., and with plenty of room back stage so that the house could be used for plays or concerts if desired. Charging one dollar a seat the theatre has been running to three capacity houses every day and has been immensely successful in this, its first season, thus proving that a well designed theatre in simple restrained taste, showing feature pictures can be financially successful when catering to a discriminating audience.

its activities in focusing public attention upon fire prevention, this being the focal point in the year round fire prevention campaign. Motion picture theatre owners and operators should as good citizens cooperate in this general campaign and have an excellent opportunity through their programs to make a major contribution to public education in fire prevention. The man responsible for any building, whether it be a motion picture theatre or any other type of structure, should make it his personal responsibility at this time to see that no preventable hazards are allowed to exist and that the buildings for which he is responsible are protected from fire to the fullest extent possible.

M-G-M Device Adjusts Sound

Hollywood — Automatic leveling and adjusting of sound through a "squeeze track" developed by the company is claimed by M-G-M. This eliminates the danger of marring the projected sound through mistaken handling of the fader, it is asserted.

In effect, the idea parallels that of the device used in player piano rolls. The artist plays the roll putting in all his own inflections, volumes, and technique. This is recorded on the roll, so that the next operator has only to follow his guiding line to reproduce absolutely the original work of the great artist.

In film presentation, volume of sound has up to now depended on the operator, who is furnished a "cue sheet" which he may or may not follow. Hence in many cases the most careful recording in the tudio is lost in the theatre through the operator's mistakes. It was to aid this situation that the studios recently sent men to every key city to aid the exhibitor in proper sound presentation.

The new "squeeze track" control of volume in the theatre is automatic, and eliminates all projection booth mistakes, it is said. It rests on the principle that the volume of photographed sound on film may be reduced by narrowing the strip of graduations that produce the sound. Normally sound is photographed on a strip at the edge of the film eight one-hundredths of an inch wide.

In the M-G-M discovery the film strip of this width is used as before the record the sound as it comes from the microphone, this sound being carefully "monitored."

Then, when the prints for the exhibitor are made, this sound track is narrowed, to as little as two one-hundredths of an inch, where necessary to keep the proper balance of sound. Narrowing this film strip eliminates or reduces surface and other noises together with the sound volume, M-G-M asserts.

When the film is shown in the theatre, the operator need only bring any part of it to the effective volume, and the remainder of the picture automatically stays in proportion. He need never touch his "fader" or sound control apparatus, again for that picture.

Under the old system a "cue sheet" came with the picture, instructing the operator to place the sound at this or that level on certain lines or situations. Obviously many mistakes were possible.

The new "automatically controlled" sound film is already in use and, engineers at the studios expect, will eventually be used on all M-G-M output.

Cones or Horns, Which is Better?

horn type speaker is a serious defect.

In order to enable a fair comparison to be made between the frequency response characteristics of the two types of speakers, the response curve of the directional baffle type speaker was raised 7 decibels. In order to determine the relative average efficiencies of the two types of speakers the curve for the directional baffle type speaker was placed at its proper level, and the average response between its cut-off limits (90 and 6000 cycles) determined by means of a planimeter. The result obtained is 15.6 decibels. The average response of the horn type loudspeaker for the same input power and between the same limits is 18.3 decibels. The average straight-ahead response of the horn type loudspeaker is thus 2.7 decibels greater than that of the directional baffle type loudspeaker, for the same power input. This corresponds to a power efficiency ratio of 1.9 to 1.0. This difference corresponds to between 1 and 2 steps on the average gain control and is consequently of minor importance.

The radiation distribution characteristics of both types of speakers as now used are sufficiently good to yield satisfactory results. These distribution characteristics are fairly uniform through angles of about 20 degrees to each side of the normal to the mouth opening. In the average size of theatre this is sufficient. In wider and larger houses, two or more speakers may be used, thus securing good directional characteristics as well as permitting an increase in the total amount of radiation as required by the larger size of the house.

No accurate measurements were made with respect to this quantity. However, it has been our observation that similar houses require the same number of speakers of either type for satisfactory sound reproduction. This indicates that, in view of the somewhat greater efficiency of the horn type speaker, the directional baffle type speaker has the edge in respect to input power capacity. This is what might be expected from the fact that the radiating surface of the directional baffle type speaker, i. e., a cone, is much sturdier than the fragile metal diaphragm of the horn type speaker.

Results in Theatres

It is exceedingly interesting to compare the results obtained with both types of speakers on listening tests in theatres and see to what extent these results are explainable on the basis of the measurements described above.

Comparisons of this sort must be made separately for both speech and music.

If, in the reproduction of speech, we fix our attention upon the understandability only, we find that each of the loudspeakers is equally good. However, although speech on each of these speakers is equally understandable, the reproduction on the directional baffle type speaker is far more natural than on the horn type speaker. Reproduction on the horn type speaker has an unnatural quality. All voices sound very much alike whether of the same or opposite sex. Looking away from the screen makes it sometimes difficult to distinguish the sex, except from the context. Male voices, particularly, sound too high pitched and unnatural.

These results are easily explainable on the basis of the obtained frequency characteristics. It is well known that the elimination of all frequencies below 300 cycles and above 4000 cycles exerts a negligible effect upon the understandability of speech. Since, on the whole, the response of the two speakers between these limits is the same, we would expect the understandability to be the same. This is what is actually observed.

However, the characteristic frequencies of the speaking voice lie below 300 cycles. They center around 125 cycles for the male voice and around 250 cycles for the female voice. It is these "fundamental" frequencies which give to each speaking voice its individuality and distinctiveness. A lack or deficiency of the frequencies below 300 cycles will rob a voice of these characteristics. This accounts for the superiority in naturalness of speech reproduction on the directional baffle type loudspeaker. The response of the directional baffle type speaker, between 100 and 300 cycles, is considerably greater than that of the horn type speaker between the same limits. This is particularly true below 140 cycles. Around 100 cycles the difference in response is around 12 decibels.

The reproduction of music is also adversely affected by the deficiency in the response below 300 cycles. Music reproduced on a horn type speaker lacks the fullness and depth apparent in the reproduction by the directional baffle type speaker. The complete reproduction of the lower register instruments is impossible on the horn type speaker. The result is that music loses its real quality and retains merely its melody. This is particularly true for music of a symphonic nature.

In a recent paper certain statements are made in a discussion of horn and cone (or baffle) type speakers. The cone (or baffle) type speakers referred to in that paper are of a type wherein cones are set in a flat baffle, a type which is much less widely used than the directional baffle type speakers. Some of the claims made for the horn type loudspeaker are not borne out by our experiments. Thus it is claimed that the horn type loudspeaker and flat baffle type of loudspeaker are equally satisfactory as regards frequency characteristics. This may be true in theory but tests of actual devices as used in commercial practice show that the upper and lower cut-off frequencies of the flat baffle type of loudspeaker, which coincide approximately with those of the directional baffle type using the same cone, are much more widely separated than those of the horn type loudspeakers.

In addition, the claim for power efficiency ratio of the horn type speaker to flat baffle type of 10 to 1 refers to a single cone in a flat baffle. In practice cones are never used this way in theatres, being either used in multiple on a flat baffle or, as is commonly the case, being set in a directional baffle. Either of these setups results in a marked increase of efficiency. A comparison of a horn type with a single cone is thus not representative of the relative characteristics of standard apparatus.

The radiation resistance characteristic shown for a horn type loudspeaker with a 50 cycle cut-off is not typical of the horns employed in practice. The construction of a horn with so low a cut-off is very expensive and the size of the horn would probably be such as to make it too large for the average theatre. Aside from these considerations, the smooth cut-off shown is attainable only with an infinitely long horn, that is, attainable only with the unattainable. The frequency characteristic of a finite horn always exhibits horn resonances such as those which appear on the actual horn characteristic. In addition, as has been shown above, considerations of efficiency favor the horn type of loudspeaker only to a slight extent.

Conclusions

The above results can now be summarized as follows: In power handling capacity the two speakers are about the same. In efficiency the horn type speaker is somewhat superior. The directional characteristics of both types are satisfactory. As regards frequency response characteristics, the directional baffle type speaker is markedly superior to the horn type in the reproduction of both speech and music. On the basis of these factors it appears quite conclusively that for theatre reproduction, of the commercial devices in use at the present time, the directional baffle type loudspeaker yields more satisfactory results.

Use Fader Cues

IN the proper presentation of sound pictures the importance of the fader cue sheet can not be overstressed. Too often there is a tendency to ignore this important item and then blame the equipment for any reproduction defects which may occur. The cue sheet is a dependable guide to the projectionist in advising of changes in volume. It is far more efficient than the signal system by an observer in the audience.

If you are not arranging fader cues on your programs you are overlooking a real bet in the proper presentation of your shows.

New Front Plate and Lens Adjustment To Facilitate Manipulation

Practically an Instantaneous Change of Lenses is Possible with New Unit, International Projector Claims

INTERNATIONAL PROJECTOR CORP., has placed on the market a new Power's front plate with lateral lens adjustment and a Power's aperture change assembly, to facilitate manipulation of lenses and apertures on Power's projectors equipped for sound projection.

The new front plate assembly is designed along the lines of the former type, but a number of new features have been added.

Practically an instantaneous change of lenses is possible with the new unit, International says, and a lens centering device has been added, making it possible to center the projected picture on the screen when sound-on-film system is used. This feature is said to permit use of the proportional type aperture plate and a shorter length focal lens, so that the projected picture may be increased in dimension to meet the dimensions of the silent or sound-on-disc prints.

Old Type Rack Eliminated

Another feature cited is elimination of the old type rack and pinion lens focusing adjustment and substitution of the micrometer type of focusing pinion which allows accurate adjustment of the lens and eliminates possibility of the lens jarring out of focus during projection.

A new type framing lamp assembly has been incorporated in the new device and may be instantly removed for lamp replacement when necessary. The pull chain for the lamp socket is readily accessible to light the framing lamp when threading the projector.

A reference to the lettered illustration, Fig. 2 in connection with the following data, will explain the operation of this equipment.

A is the front plate which attaches to the Power's mechanism in a similar manner to all previous types.

B is the lens mount and focusing assembly attached to the front plate A.

Lenses are securely clamped in this mount by locking screw C.

Lens Adjustment Centers Film

D is the lateral lens adjustment by means of which the picture is centered on the film and screen when changing from silent or sound-on-disk to sound-on-film with either the proportional or regular sound aperture.

E is an adjustable stop for determining the lateral throw of the lens. This stop is adjusted when the installation of the assembly is made and remains fixed thereafter for any given focal length of lens. The two knobs F are attached to the micrometer focusing device and, as will be noted, may be operated from either side of the projector.

G is the pull chain for the framing lamp and H is the framing lamp assembly latch, one of which is attached to either side of the assembly so that the instant removal of the framing lamp assembly may be readily accomplished without interference with any other part of the unit.

Fig. 1 shows a fixed focus collar, similar to that used on the Super Simplex Projector, by means of which lenses may be instantly snapped into focus where quick lens changes are necessary.

The hole G, Fig. 1, in the collar slips over rod J, Fig. 2, and thereby accurately locates the lens rotationally so that the picture is always in the same place on the screen regardless of how many times the lens may be removed and replaced.

Where lenses do not project far enough beyond the lens mount B to allow this fixed focus clamp to be readily attached, many of the lens extension attachments used in connection with lenses on Super Simplex Projectors may be used.

First Nat'l Wins Fire Trophy

Charlotte—First National exchange has been awarded the silver trophy, marking first place in the nation-wide competition for maintaining the highest average in measures taken toward fire prevention in film buildings. Sherwood Brockwell, state fire marshal, presented the trophy to Manager F. P. Bryan at the exchange building. The conservation department of the Film Board of Trade is donor of the cup.

Strong Designs New Changeover

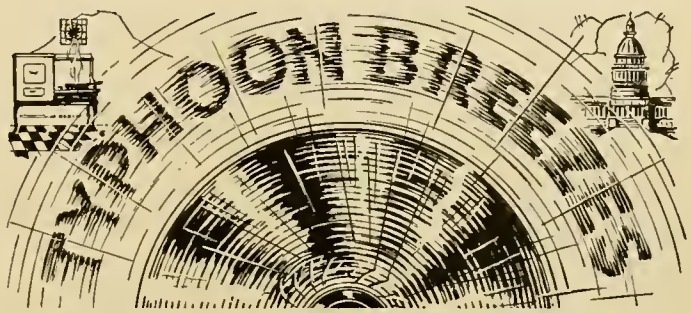
Chicago—Designed especially for the super Simplex projector, the RCA and the front-shutter Motiograph, a new changeover has been developed by L. D. Strong, head of the Essannay Electric Manufacturing Co. The new changeover attaches direct to the projector and combines an eye shield as one of its features. The new model is known as the "super" and is the fourth changeover in the Essannay line, providing a unit for every type of projector now in use, according to the manufacturer.

A point of special interest in connection with the new model is an automatic cutoff which is declared to eliminate any possibility of burning out the coil. This cutoff feature has been adapted to two other style changeovers made by Essannay and is now to be obtained on all except the Junior model which is placed over the porthole. With the automatic cutoff the current is taken off the coils as soon as the changeover is made.

Another new feature developed for all styles of changeovers by Essannay is a treadle type footswitch, which, according to Strong, allows the projectionist greater freedom for handling his machines and eliminates the necessity for grouping on the floor to push the changeover button.



The changeovers in the Essannay line now include the "five point" so named because it combines in one unit a changeover, an eye shield framing light, film gate opener and fire gate finger. This type attaches to the projector. Another model, the Strong de luxe, is placed at the porthole. It has a five-inch opening to accommodate light rays from the projector or from stereopticon and effect machines. This unit, operated by heavy duty solenoids, also can be operated by hand to provide a slow iris fadeout when desired.

The "super" model was designed to meet the new conditions resulting from the latest projectors developed by Simplex, RCA and Motiograph. The Junior model, first of the devices developed by Strong, is designed for any type or make of projector where the light beam does not exceed three inches when passing through the changeover. It is placed at the porthole.

Side-Wall Speaker Placed on Market

Seattle—Speakers, which hang on sidewalls rather than behind the screen, have been developed by Sullivan and Son of the Grand here, where the speakers have been installed. Western Discount Corp. is to distribute the new equipment.

The speakers are declared to be non-directional, and the claim is made they minimize vibrations and echo. They can be used with any make of equipment, it is stated.

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

Part of Your Job!

WE often wonder just how seriously the average house manager takes the maintenance of equipment and cleanliness of his house. Whether he is satisfied that this angle is being watched properly or whether he is content to let it take its own course.

Proper maintenance of the theatre had always constituted a most important feature of a manager's job, yet, in visiting many houses one can detect, or sense a feeling, that things are in a run-down condition.

Carpets worn to shreds, screen unsteady, seats badly in need of repair, leather torn, frames scaled or broken, projection way below par, and so on right down the line from top to bottom.

And then there are those invisible items, as far as the patron is concerned directly, but of major importance just the same, such as the roofs, the hanging ceiling, the many store rooms, the cellar and the heating or ventilating equipment.

We recently spent a most interesting evening with the head of a large chain's maintenance department, and we lent added interest when we found that he had been a house manager himself only a short time before. But, as he explained, it all came about quite suddenly. His superiors noted his ability to keep his theatre's equipment in tip-top shape all the time, so they selected him for division maintenance man and a little later he headed that bureau in the circuit's home office.

He, like many other smart managers, found the time, despite the hundred and one other important details of his job, to organize the supervision of the expensive equipment in his theatre. He worked out his cleaners system so that the house was immaculate and clean looking at all times. He injected his own ideas into the many phases of maintenance and cleaning (yes, he had polished brass too in his time).

What most showmen, especially the newer ones, must learn and learn quickly, is to become acquainted and study the many details connected with their theatre's operating equipment. They must divorce themselves from the dangerous notion that such equipment is "just machinery." It's more than that. It's the very essence of the theatre's operation and while the manager need not be an expert on any one phase of his house's operation, he should have more than a passing knowledge of every part of it.

Whether your house is independently operated or part of a nation-wide chain, the maintenance of its equipment is not a home office problem. It is YOUR personal responsibility and if you cannot assume that responsibility you are not the man for the job.

Powers Shows The Way On Cleaning Carpets In Theatre

W. M. Powers of the La Roy Theatre in Portsmouth, Ohio, finds the appointment of one man on his cleaning staff to supervise the maintenance of the seats and carpets a valuable adjunct to his method of managing theatres.

This should open up new avenues of thought to many other showmen who, perhaps, can better follow this angle up then to let it take its own course with the expensive and disastrous results of broken down equipment or dissatisfied patrons.

Powers tells us that he is quite fortunate in having a man on his staff who practically takes charge of all maintenance and who is very good in looking after every detail of it 100%. This man makes it his business to go over seats daily, keep them all tight and well-fastened to the floor and also to keep them oiled so that the added annoyance of squeaking will not interfere with the patrons attention to the screen entertainment.

While dwelling on the oiling angle for your seats, you might also pay attention to the care which he exercises in keeping a cloth handy and wiping off all oil after he oils the hinges and moveable parts of the seat, so that it will not get on anyone's clothing. As a matter of fact, they have not had any kick from this source whatsoever which speaks well for the way it is being handled.

Now we come to a very interesting phase of Powers' system of maintenance so far as the carpets are concerned.

They take their carpet up at least once a year and scrub it. On the face of this statement it might sound like a rather terrific job, but, of course, we assume that portions of the carpet around his theatre are laid in such a way that it is feasible to take up parts and scrub it without endangering the carpet itself. He tells us that his alley has a pit to it which makes it an ideal place to scrub the carpet. After taking it up it is first beaten until all loose dirt is out, then the vacuum is run over it several times, after which they place it face up in the alley and put the hose on it and keep scraping the water out of it with a heavy hoe, like one used to take ashes out of the boiler. This is kept on until the water that comes out of it is clean.

We have no idea of going into the technical detail of the suggestions as advanced by our many members and readers, but when some suggestion of real merit comes along we think it is deserving of some attention before it is discarded or passed up.

On the fact of Powers' suggestion, one might get the idea that this process would hurt the carpet. He tells us that it does not do it the slightest bit of harm and that before he attempted it, he got some dope from a company that shampooed carpets and found out that it could be successfully handled without running any risk of damaging the carpet itself.

Taking one aisle at a time, he finds that in a short time, probably within the space of four or five days, the entire house has had the carpet thoroughly scrubbed and cleaned and it is then replaced.

He has organized his cleaning and theatre staff in such a way that they all pitch in and help, which makes it a fast job and not too much of a burden on any one or two of the staff. This is also an important angle, as we can readily understand where shampooing or scrubbing the carpet could become quite a big proposition and one that would tire or wear out just one or two of the people employed around the theatre.

Particular attention is also placed on the importance of keeping the lobby and foyer entrances as clean as possible by several cleanings and sweepings during the day. In this way, they minimize the amount of dirt dragged in by the patrons entering the theatre.

These angles are certainly valuable ones and no doubt will come in mighty handy to showmen who are anxious to improve their own method in the care and cleaning of their theatre. It also adds many good months of wear to the carpets in the theatre, as the dirt and grime represent one of the worst elements of wear and tear on the carpets under foot.

ALL FOR ONE AND ONE FOR ALL!

OUR slogan takes on a new meaning starting with this issue in the Showman section in Motion Picture News.

WE'VE described how your brother managers have successfully executed all sorts of exploitation, ballyhoo and publicity stunts; and what's more important, you have contributed to those items yourself and helped make the Club pages tremendously valuable and interesting.

NOW once each month, the Club pages are being incorporated into The Showman section and particular emphasis and prominence will be given material pertaining to the proper maintenance of equipment in your theatre.

YOU MUST DO YOUR PART, TOO

THIS important phase of showmanship and theatre management has been sadly neglected in the past. Managers are faced with all sorts of new equipment problems while still struggling along with the problems of the old. They want to know more about the expensive apparatus they are responsible for.

SO the Managers' Round Table Club again establishes a distinct precedent and incorporates this vital feature as part of our Club activities and pages.

WE have got to have material for this monthly section. Just as you now send us the details of your various show-selling activities, so you must tell us how you are keeping your theatre's equipment in perfect condition all the time. How you prevent breakdowns and trouble by constantly watching every piece of equipment and furnishing in the house. How you promote cooperative goodwill between yourself and the booth, the ushers, the cleaners, etc., etc.

TELL US HOW YOU DO IT

THESE are all important factors in the proper maintenance and operation of your theatre. To broadcast how effectively and efficiently you handle this part of your job, is to let the whole world know that you are a capable manager, and besides, it will be immensely valuable and helpful to your brother members and showmen the world over.

Chewing Gum Problem Discussed In Detail By R. V. Erk

Being an interested party to discussion on "What is the best remedy for the chewing gum evil in theatres," R. V. Erk of the Mays Piqua Theatre in Piqua, Ohio, advances a good suggestion wherein he states they have found kerosene oil (which costs about $.20 per gallon) to be about as efficient a gum solvent and cleaner as anything they have been able to secure.

He also calls attention to the fact that at least once a month his janitor cleans his gum from the under sides of the seat with a sharp putty knife and then finishes the cleaning with a cloth saturated with kerosene.

These are mighty good suggestions which should be of tremendous value to those showmen who have paid very little attention to this particular angle of theatre management. Many of us are willing to grasp a good suggestion to improve our theatre and its cleanliness but we sometimes lack the information as to where to secure the necessary material with which to accomplish it. In this case you have an every day product which can be secured anywhere, at any time at an inexpensive cost.

We are very grateful to Mr. Erk, whose experience in managing theatres dates back a good many years and any time he is willing to tell us about his ideas along the lines of theatre equipment and maintenance, as well as cleanliness, we will do well to lend a willing and ready ear. Let's hear some more from you Mr. Erk, and lay particular emphasis on the maintenance of your equipment which is a phase of showmanship which you particularly seem to excel in.

William F. Gabriel Is Now Handling Two In Painesville

Having made such a good record for himself while he was at the Uptown Theatre in Cleveland, Ohio, William F. Gabriel is now the manager of the Utopia and Park Theatres in Painesville, Ohio.

With two houses on his hands he will no doubt be very busy, but we are sure it is the kind of activity that will be productive of some excellent showmanship. Mr. Gabriel has been in the show game for quite some time, so he is certainly qualified for the position he now holds. His town, we understand, offers him opportunities such as the regular towns of its size do. We want to wish him a lot of luck on his new venture and we hope that he will keep us posted so that we can inform his fellow members as to the progress he is making. And listen, Bill! When you send us in your first contribution, include your photo with it and we'll give you a regular "intro."

Gilmore Landed A Float In Two And A Half Mile Parade

Entering a float into a parade is another way that a wise showman has for plugging his picture. In this case it was E. W. Gilmore, manager of the Capitol Theatre in Windsor, Ontario, who pulled the stunt and successfully executed it.

On Labor Day the local firemen held their field day, and, in conjunction with it, a parade nearly two and a half miles long. In this parade, Gilmore had his float. The float was a three-ton truck, on the floor of which was a pile of common clay. The clay was so heavy that it was found necessary to place a dummy bottom on the truck. A box was placed along side of it. The box was filled with clay, with it also being smeared on the sides. Along the sides of the truck Gilmore placed the title of the picture, name of star, theatre and playdates. Under this, and on the top of the banner he used stock cut-outs of the New Show World season. This added life and color to the layout. The copy on the banners appropriately tied in the film.

A stunt of this sort, being so different from the regular run of things, proved fine for Windsor. The local newspaper editor liked it so much that he commented on it the next day. In this manner Gilmore received an additional plug, the other plug being the exclamation, "Why, it's common clay," uttered by the spectators when they saw the truck. And the common clay ballyhoo sold "Common Clay." Right, "E. W."?

AVOIDING BREAKDOWNS

If your theatre's booth is equipped with but one generator, what provision have you made for continuing your show in the event of a breakdown of that generator?

We are all inclined to let these questions slide off our backs, like water on a duck, until we find ourselves in just such a position, then we wonder why we never gave it a thought before.

Suppose you investigate this important angle right now. If you have a second generator, is it being watched and run frequently enough to insure its proper condition when it is needed? One good plan, suggested by G. F. A. of Cleveland, is that the projectionist alternate between the two generators so that they are both carrying the burden of furnishing the necessary juice. That's a good suggestion and should result in longer life for both plants.

Maybe you have a better suggestion, or have some other way of handling this question. If you have, let's hear from you.

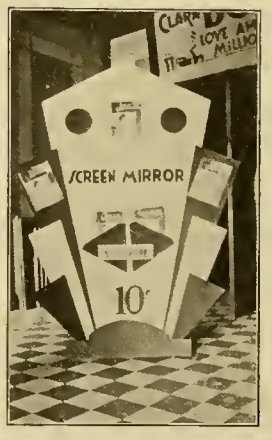
Economy Important, And Here's The Way Says Pedro Gelabert

The saving of electrical energy is another way of demonstrating a man's ability to operate a theatre efficiently yet economically.

Pedro Gelabert, Jr., writing from the San Jose Theatre in San Juan, Porto Rico, tells us that he has managed to cut down a great deal of his electrical cost in the past four months by installing a new type of reflector arc lamp in the San Jose Theatre. At the same time he tells us he installed two rectifiers one for each of the lamps and he has found by careful watching, this type of equipment saves more electricity than anything else he has tried.

Another point that he found worthy of any good showman's attention was the needless waste of too much lighting in the front of his theatre, particularly under the marquee after the second show began at night. In this case some may say that he goes to extreme when he turns out practically all of the marquee lights until the show is over, but even if you were to temper this suggestion, with leaving at least one switch on so that there is some form of illumination where the passer-by can see what is playing as well as the folks leaving the theatre before the end of the performance. However, it is these suggestions which generally put you in a frame of mind to dope out your own individual problem with the view of economizing in some form or other without hurting the efficiency in your theatre's operation.

Young Gelabert, Jr., has some mighty valuable ideas and theories with regard to maintenance and care of his theatre's equipment and in his case it is particularly important because, after all, he is not within a few hours of a big distributing center where replacements are always available. That is why it would do us all a lot of good to fashion some of our own ideas after his methods.



Like most showmen located in countries outside of the United States and Canada, he manages to keep his equipment in tip-top condition and, at the same time has replacements at hand for emergencies. This is something that many of our own showmen here in America fail to understand with the result that a serious breakdown sometimes compels a discontinuance of the performance and the unfortunate refunding of admission which leaves a mighty bad taste in everyone's mouth.

Keep your eye on the CLUB pages, especially the Showman issue each month for further interesting information and details as to how this aggressive young showman from Porto Rico manages to operate his theatre efficiently and economically and, at the same time keep a careful watchful eye on every detail of his theatre's equipment.

Fred Glass Is Doing Fine On Assignment In Alliance, Neb.

Shifting over to Alliance, Neb., from his former position at McCook afforded O. Fred Glass an opportunity for introducing the town to a brand of the live-wire showmanship that he pulled at his former position, not so very long ago.

One of the first moves he made when he entered the town was to run a special one-cent matinee for kids in which he let in one kid for 15 cents, two for 16 cents—the admission price being regularly 15 cents. The stunt went over very well with the kids and over four hundred of them showed up. You can easily see how this gag can be made into a paying proposition in any town and it might be a good plan for you to try it once a month or even every week if you think it will be better that way. The photo will give you the low-down on what the kids thought of it. An hour before the house opened they started to line up.

The other photo alongside of it shows the special display board that was built in the foyer of the Imperial. Lights played upon this, and, as the colors were very pleasing, they were certain to attract the attention of the passersby. Glass got them coming and going with this one as he made it a point to run the trailer for the film or an announcement about it at every opportunity. In addition to these two photos we are also showing the special display frame he uses to sell "Screen Mirror," the magazine from Hollywood, by Frank Whitbeck and his staff, printed out on the Pacific Coast and distributed through the Fox West Coast Theatres. The strength of this angle was seen in the number of magazines that were sold the day it made its appearance.

Nearly all of his fellow Club members know what Fred did while he was at McCook, so you can all look forward to seeing him continue that showmanship in Alliance. Oke, Fred; remember we want to hear from you often concerning your work, so that we can pass it along to the rest of the Club.

Most 'Promising' Man in Show Business—?

His many friends, scattered all over the country, will be glad to learn that Eddie Hitchcock, now publicity director for the Paramount Theatre in New York, has earned this great title.

As a matter of fact, Eddie's 'promises,' if laid end to end, would reach from New York to Los Angeles, whereas, those 'promises,' which were never fulfilled, couldn't even be laid anywhere.

All of which goes to prove that besides being a wizard at publicity, or what have you, he can laugh off more 'promises' than any other forty men men in the show business.

Blaire Opens House Again; He Is Now Ready For Action

It was with a great deal of regret we learned that the Regent Theatre in Cedar Falls, Iowa, was forced to close its doors due to demolition by flames. As most of the Club members know, this house is managed by our friend, Merle R. Blaire. But we are now happy to report that the house has been renovated and rebuilt and with its new finery is more beautiful than before.

As his first move in the campaign to bring back the patronage stronger than ever, Blaire set out to promote a double-truck ad in the local newspaper. The dealers came through wonderfully and you can see the finished product in the cut we are showing. As you will notice, the theatre occupies the most prominent position on the page.

In addition to securing this valuable advertising, Blaire was also the recipient of many publicity stories and pictures from the local papers as well as the sheets in nearby towns. All of this tended towards a big opening night. And when the theatre opened its doors after being darkened a month, Blaire found that the town was mighty proud of it. We would like to say that his showmanship has done much to keep that theatre in the good graces of the community and we know that he is going to continue his good work and keep us posted on the results.

Flower Show Week Gave Greenberg A Sweet Lobby Break

Flower show week, offered Ben Greenberg, manager of the Paramount Theatre in Springfield, Mass., an opportunity to transform his lobby into a flower garden and he more than took advantage of it.

Artistic groupings of the gladioli were used, and one of the most striking was in the lobby at the left of the entrance. Here, the Paramount artist, Emil Paulson, arranged a towering pedestal which graduated back from the wide base so as to provide shelves for the flowers which are displayed in large pottery vases. The pedestal was colored in all the shades of the rainbow, and various varieties of gladioli were placed against backgrounds that harmonize with the blooms. A sun dial in front of the display added to the effect of a modernistic garden on a towering terrace.

Another grouping that attracted much attention was on the mezzanine floor. Here a large number of fir trees were used to form a background of natural green, and the flowers in vases and urns were displayed against the background and along the walls of the salon. Garden benches of concrete together with huge urns and vases transformed the spacious mezzanine salon into a spot of rare beauty.

A crew from Carter's, Inc., with the assistance of the Paramount staff, arranged the flower show, which was put on at no cost to the theatre.

In order to stage a thing like this Greenberg must be in pretty good with the local merchants, and it leads us to believe that he is pretty active in his city. So we hope to number him among the active members and contributors to the Club pages.

ECONOMY

Many showmen who lie awake nights figuring out how to cut down the cost of their advertising campaign or save a few dollars here or there in the operation of their theatre, seem to entirely overlook the tremendous saving which can be effected by looking carefully into the operating cost of the various portions of their theatre which they are so inclined to overlook.

We mean, for example, the heating plant and the fuel it takes to operate it.

Here is a phase of theatre operation which burns up needlessly thousands of dollars every year, the larger the house very often the larger the waste.

Supposing you devote a little thought to this angle and give some consideration to the many devices which are being marketed throughout the country which, perhaps for your particular theatre, can be adapted so as to maintain the efficiency of your heating plant or perhaps increase its efficiency and, at the same time, cut down the cost of the fuel.

We are not ballyhooing or advocating any particular type of equipment but, rather, are trying to impress you with the fact that there is available such fuel savers, one of which may be just what you want.

A theatre manager is supposed to be a good business man and a good business man will rarely turn a deaf ear to a solicitor or salesman who has something he believes can be used in the theatre.

After all, the short time it takes to listen to what a man has to offer should be well worth the time so spent. Why not make it a point to lend a willing ear to anyone who wants to impress upon you the fact that they are selling something that can save you money? And, as a matter of fact, you should go even further. You should scout around and find out how other theatres are economizing in their heating plants and at the same time increasing the efficiency of their equipment. We suggest that you do a lot of good common sense concentration and you may be surprised to find, even as a whole lot of other showmen have found, that if you are trying to cut down your overhead here is a corking way to do it and to show that you are a darn good business man at the same time.

Smeltzer Operating Broadway Theatre In Oakland, Calif.

It was with pleasure that we learned William G. Smeltzer, after a year's absence from the theatre, during which time he was engaged in another line of business, has returned to the game.

At the present time he is managing the Broadway Theatre in Oakland, Calif. The house is a new one, having been opened some time in August. The marquee is the largest one in Oakland and when Smeltzer sends us in a few photos of it we are going to present it to you on the Club pages. Since the house has been opened it has been doing a nice business, and we feel that the showmanship displayed by this showman is an aid to it in no small measure.

Welcome back into the active fold, Bill; and remember, we want to hear a lot more about you when you get settled at the house, because the work you turned out last time you were in the show business warranted it. Keep us posted so that we can know how you are getting along.

STAGE WEDDINGS—B. O. GOLD MINES!

WE have often wondered why some showmen would insist on looking for the pot of gold at the end of the rainbow, when right before them, in the form of a stage wedding, lies one of the prettiest pots of gold they have ever seen.

What a knockout stunt this stage wedding business has turned out to be! Everywhere we went on our recent tour, we were almost sure to hear some comment passed regarding the value of the wedding gag. The showmen in the Middle West were particularly enthusiastic about it, more so than elsewhere, though throughout the country not a single kick was heard. Stage weddings, when properly handled, ALWAYS clicked. The showman using the gag always wears a smile the next day.

When we returned to Club headquarters we decided to go into the matter more deeply. Accordingly, the back files of the Club pages were consulted, records hauled out, and we set to work. The result was astounding. Out of thirty some odd accounts of stage weddings brought to our attention, not one failed; hundreds (and at times thousands) of dollars had been promoted; showmen who had been especially successful had made them a bi-yearly feature reams of newspaper publicity had been secured, and the house had been established on a firmer good-will basis.

Planning the Campaign

Our next move was to dope out the most valuable features of the accounts on hand and compile them, with a view to presenting—as near perfect as possible—a complete, and, if strictly adhered to, fool-proof campaign for a stage wedding. It would take up considerable space to list the names of the showmen whose ideas have furnished material for this account, so we hope they will forgive our not mentioning them. In the layout below we have attempted to tabulate, and elucidate as best possible, the steps that we believe should be taken by a showman whose town offers him the facilities which the entire campaign requires. However, if you are located in a small town, don't be depressed. This campaign is meant for you too, the idea being to pick out what you can use, and put the rest away in your file, till such time as you can make use of it.

Get the Bride and Groom

Your first move, of course, is the most important one—that of securing the bride and groom. The next step is to try and promote your local newspaper as sponsor. Having secured that (or even if you haven't) the local dealers are then in line for the proposition. The dealers especially necessary are: Haberdashers, milliners, shoe stores, ladies' wearing apparel, men's wearing apparel, photographer, jeweler, auto dealer, furniture store, department store, florist, and printer. By offering credit lines to each and every dealer, and impressing upon them the value of the free advertising which you are going to give them on your screen, in your lobby and house organ, you can promote gifts for the couple. In order to keep on the good side of the newspaper sell the dealers the idea that a full-page or double truck co-operative ad will be of immense value to them. Show them how they can advertise the merchandise in the paper. The gifts donated by the merchants should be placed on display in the store windows and the theatre lobby.

Another angle is that of having the Mayor send a personal letter to you wishing you success on your venture. The Chamber of Commerce should do the same thing. These letters can then be used for newspaper ads and screen heralds. The local bank can also donate some money for an account to be given to the newlyweds. There's always the possibility that you can promote a free honeymoon trip out of the Chamber of Commerce or the travel bureau. Give this a little thought as it is an angle that won't hurt you to try, especially since any wide-awake Chamber of Commerce in another town would be anxious to secure publicity through your town and be rated as "friendly."

Newspaper Publicity

Your newspaper publicity is another thing in which great care must be taken. The stories should be planted properly. First the announcement of the wedding, then a couple of human interest stories, followed by an account of the bride going shopping—in one of the cars loaned by the auto dealer—to the merchants who have offered her the trousseau and other gifts. This should be followed by an account of the groom doing his shopping. Photos of the couple, before being married, should be displayed in the windows of the local merchants. These photos, as well as those taken at the wedding, by the local photographer, should be placed in the paper. Don't neglect your follow-up story on the day after the wedding. And, if possible, grab another bit of spcae when the couple return from the honeymoon. Shoot your co-operative ads the day before the wedding.

Now we come to the theatre. Most showmen do not care to have reserved seats for an attraction of this sort, so it is advisable to announce that no one will be permitted to enter the theatre while the ceremony is in progress. The picture should be an appropriate one with excellent shorts rounding out the screen program.

Good Spot for Organ

Have your organ soloist feature a special theme song, written if possible by some local composer. Have a local tenor or quartette sing it. Try and tie-up a local band to work either on the stage or the pit. Construct a special stage setting that will fit in with the occasion. Have your front displays on the same tone. Use special lighting effects and any other little novelties that you may think of. An angle, on this idea, that is certainly novel was forwarded to us by a member out on the Coast. He arranged to drop a load of some kind of blossoms from the flies, while the ceremony was going on. This was done in a dignified manner, the blossoms falling easily and not appearing as if they were dumped out of a basket or something. Another member utilized the same gag, but instead of blossoms he used a trick lighting effect.

Work Up a Climax

Just before your stage wedding starts, run a trailer expressing your thanks to all who co-operated with you on the campaign. At the conclusion of the expression of gratitude, have a flash read—"And Now—HERE COMES THE BRIDE!" At this cut off the film, have your organist play the wedding march, the stage curtains drawn and the bridal party (which had assembled on the mezzanine or in the back of the orchestra) proceed down the center aisle and march up to the stage, where the curtains have been opened, revealing the stage all set for the wedding. The officiating clergyman should be waiting, the band playing, the lights all set, and everything in readiness. As the party goes up on the stage, have the band play the theme song, with the chorus being sung by whoever you are using for that purpose. At the conclusion of the song, start the ceremony, and finish with singing and playing the last two lines of the theme song as the curtain slowly closes upon the wedding scene. Then have your organist burst forth with all the power that your console holds (if you haven't an organist use an organ record on the non-synch), shoot up all your lights for a few moments, have your house staff at attention, all doors in the house open (weather permitting) and every light on the outside in full flare. Hit the sheet with your coming attractions, followed by your trailer, and the stunt is over—once more "the show must go on."

Now It's Up to You

There's the whole dope, as near complete as we can give it to you. Take the suggestions and fashion them to suit yourself. We can't dope out your own particular conditions. The suggestions we have passed along cover a wide and varied field of showmanship. In a number of cities, the entire campaign, as we have set forth, has been used. In many towns just part of it has been pressed into service. It's up to you. You know how to sell shows, you know how to act on suggestions. Give a little time and thought to the laying out of your campaign and you'll find that there's gold in them thar tie-ups. Oke?

Keep This in Mind!!

This is designed, primarily, as a rough suggestion only. You can probably find fault with many points contained in it. But the frame-work is here. Build your structure according to the materials you have to work with and, if this little story will prompt you to work up one of these profitable stage weddings, then we have fulfilled our mission.

We suggest you pay particular attention to the details of the actual stage weddings in this, or past, issues of the Club pages. There you will find all the dope as successfully executed by brother managers.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Mickey Gross Hangs Up Three Winners On Stage Weddings

Three consecutive winners is the enviable record hung up by Mickey Gross, manager of the Orpheum Theatre in Sioux City, Iowa, by the clicking of his third stage wedding recently.

In three months' time Mickey has engineered three, and when that can be done in a town there's plenty to show that a showman is located there. In all of his tie-ups Gross has had the full cooperation of the local merchants and the newspapers. The dealers have contributed freely of their merchandise and nary a complaint has been registered. This may be accounted for by the fact that Gross sees to it that no occasion slips by wherein they can secure publicity for themselves. He advertised the dealers participating in the wedding gag, on the screen, in his lobby and in the newspapers.

The latest wedding was taken part in by two couples. It was so thoroughly covered by Gross that not a stone was left unturned. The bride's shopping tours, as well as the groom's, crashed the local papers. Every day the stunt received a play, and the dealers came in for mention. We are reproducing here one of the monster heralds that were used to plug the affair. They were plastered all over the town. But they weren't the only publicity mediums. Every dealer in the town had a card plugging the show, and all of the participating dealers featured a special display of the merchandise they were donating. In the photo we are showing you can get a line on how Gross cashed in on word-of-mouth comment by having the brides and grooms appear in the lobby of the theatre almost every evening for a week before the event was to take place. This angle proved very effective, and though it depends entirely upon the couples themselves, may help you, too, should you care to use it.

WATCH FOR ROOF LEAKS

That personal supervision is absolutely essential has been demonstrated time and again. It is permissible for busy managers to delegate certain duties to their assistant or chiefs, but at regular intervals they must make a complete tour of the theatre, from roof to cellar, to make sure that every part of the house is getting the proper attention. Especially where repairs, etc., are required.

Recently, stopping off at a beautiful house near New York City, I asked the manager what happened to cause an ugly stain on his beautifully decorated ceiling. He was as much surprised as I was, so together we went to the hanging ceiling (which cost me a cleaner's bill) and found that rain had leaked in from the roof right above the stained ceiling.

Going to the roof, it was found that sharp stones, probably thrown to the roof by youngsters in the street, plus some broken bulbs, etc., had settled into the waterproofing and eventually caused the leak. There were about a dozen other spots due to start leaks before long.

In the first place, as this manager admitted, the stones, bulbs and other rubbish should never have accumulated on the roof, and in the second place, had he (the manager) made it a point to make frequent trips, as mentioned above, the danger of leaks would have been minimized.

Theatres generally have large areas of roof space. Some of these spots are not always accessible, such as stage roofs, organ chamber roofs, etc. Which makes the suggestion for closer inspection all the more important.

At the appointed hour, on the night set for the wedding, everything was in readiness. A number of the gifts donated by the local jeweler attracted in their display case in the lobby. The ushers were all shined up. The house was spotless. The organist had a special solo ready. A local celebrity was on hand to unite the couple; a special stage setting had been painted by Gross and set up; new lighting effects were achieved and the whole thing was in readiness for a gala event. And it was every bit that!

A half hour after the house opened, it was jammed to capacity, and hundreds of disappointed people stormed the doors, vainly endeavoring to effect an entrance. Everything went over in shipshape fashion, not a hitch being encountered in the proceedings. Gross had made a success out of his third wedding. He is now getting set to stage a triple wedding, and if he can secure the couples and put the plan through it will be the first time in the history of showmanship, if we recall rightly, that such a gag has been engineered.

Unlimited possibilities can be found in these stage wedding stunts. All required is that you don your thinking cap when you set out to lay your campaign; because the way you plan your event is the main thing. When once you have finished your campaign and think that you have covered every angle possible, hit the line hard; and don't switch from your original ideas unless something better offers itself. You can't get anywhere without systematic planning because it constitutes the very backbone of showmanship. The showman who works spasmodically will always find his box-office acting that way, too. And still another point that we want to stress is that plenty of care should be taken in the selection of your feature film and surrounding program. Gross got a break on his; he was playing "Holiday." Look over your dates and if you are going to pull a stage wedding and find that the picture don't pull with it, yank it out. Give them a show that they'll enjoy completely and you'll retain the good-will of your house.

Equipment and Maintenance

The following article by E. E. Bair of the State and American Theatres in East Liverpool, Ohio, carries a real punch, providing your mind is open to suggestions. It ought to command attention from any showman worthy of the title. Read it over and see if you don't agree with us. Then sit down and tell us how YOU handle the maintenance problem in your theatre.

"Save the surface and you save all," "Motorists Wise Simonize" are two known advertising slogans that can properly be applied and conjured with the importance of maintenance. Foolish, indeed, is the man who buys a car and permits it to stand out in the weather without care, and foolish, indeed, is the same somebody that builds a house and fails to have it painted. PROPER MAINTENANCE CUTS DOWN THE DEPRECIATION COST REGARDLESS OF WHAT THE LEDGER SETS FORTH. Ask any taxicab company.

We're in the show business—backed by an old adage, "the show must go on," but it is a lamentable fact that carelessness has been permitted to enter and as a consequence numberless dollars have leaked out, theatres become "lemons," ledger shows red and the operator wonders what's the matter. The answer is CARELESSNESS and inattention to detail.

What can overcome this condition? It must be the enterprise of the man responsible, a regular periodic inspection of all that requires inspection, and a determined effort to repair all that needs repairing. "A dollar in time saves nine" holds in this business, too. It's not false economy.

If the man responsible is the theatre manager a personal and regular inspection of seats may disclose a few loose screws, THE thing to do is, "TIGHTEN THE SCREWS;" in other words, don't let it ride till the next inspection or all the rest of the screws may be loose and the seat ruined—then the dollars leak out. If one end of the aisle carpet is worn, turn it end for end, but first be sure the vacuum cleaner has done double duty; possibly its use would have prevented the worn place in the first place.

THEATRE MAINTENANCE covers many items, roofs, outside metal work, projectors, signs, and what not. It is lost effort to outline a general inspection schedule for all theatres. The point in question for any man that is responsible is the REGULAR inspection of his own responsibilities, and if he finds any loose screws—TIGHTEN THE SCREWS.

The above may sound like a D. M.'s tirade on a group of embryonic managers (without the desk sounding). Nevertheless, it covers one of the evils or one of the BIG leaks in this business of ours—LACK OF MAINTENANCE.

Al. Lourie Labored To Put Tennis Club Across In His Town

One year ago, Albert B. Lourie, manager of the Morton Theatre, Dorchester, Mass., spent considerable time and labor in organizing a tennis club.

The Tennis Club made such tremendous strides that they held an open tournament the first week in September—receiving entries from all over the city and nearby towns, including Boston.

Since Lourie had worked in the interests of the Tennis Club and was on friendly terms with its chairman, it was an easy matter to make certain tie-ups that proved of benefit to both the Tennis Club and the theatre.

The theatre displayed in its lobby 10 cups which were to be awarded to the winners of the tournament. The cups had been donated by such notables as the Governor of the State, the Mayor of Boston, the State Senator and other leading city and state officials. The cups remained in the lobby for five days—creating much interest.

The Tennis Club had a large sign made up, explaining that the final matches of the tournament would take place on Sunday, Sept. 7, and that the winners would be awarded the cups at the Publix-Morton Theatre that same evening. The theatre did not pay for this sign.

Over 150 entries were received in the tournament. And considerable interest was shown in the entire proceedings, especially Sunday, when the finals took place with thousands of people witnessing the matches.

Prior to each match, the judges would announce that the cups would be awarded from the stage of the Morton Theatre Sunday evening at 9:15. The presentation of the president and his awarding of the cups only took five or six minutes. However, this special attraction of only a few minutes' duration attracted some extra four or five hundred people who were friends of the receivers of the cups.

The newspaper broke next day with a story on it, too. And, best of all, it came in on the sporting page as well. In that manner Lourie secured a few valuable plugs for his house in the one newspaper. And all at no cost to himself. Keep it up, Albert, and we hope you will remember to keep us posted on your work.

Thompson Scored A Bulls-Eye With His Target Practicing

Showmen all over the country aim to hit the bulls-eye with their exploitation; but T. W. Thompson, manager of the Avalon in Grand Junction, Colo., arranged to have his patrons do some bulls-eye hitting in conjunction with his current feature.

A compo front was built at the edge of the sidewalk with copy reading, "Come on, you deadshots. Hit the bulls-eye and receive a guest ticket to Zane Grey's LAST OF THE DUANES—AVALONE—Fri., Sat., Sun."

About 40 feet back he placed a target of 8 x 10 compo with feature copy and a regular two-foot target in center. The bulls-eye was a two-inch hole with a cowbell behind it. Air rifles were used and one free shot was allowed each person wanting to try their luck.

The target range was open on first two days of picture's showing and proved to be one of the best attention getters that has been used in a long time. Thompson safely estimates that a thousand people tried their luck at trying to shoot themselves a guest ticket. The percentage of good marksmen was exceedingly low—25 people in all being lucky enough to hit the bulls-eye and win a guest ticket.

So, despite the fact that he himself did no shooting, Thompson scored a bulls-eye. And if it's oke with you, "T. W.," how about scoring another one on the Club pages by shooting us in some of your future work?

MORE ART DISPLAYS!

Here are some samples of poster art work done by Victor Bonetta, at the Newman Theatre in Kansas City, Missouri. Look them over and perhaps you'll find one or two slants that will help you too. In view of the fact that a great many showmen do their own sign painting when they want to plug something special, we are presenting these. Let's have some of your work, too, so that we can pass it along. And remember to give us some dope on the color schemes.

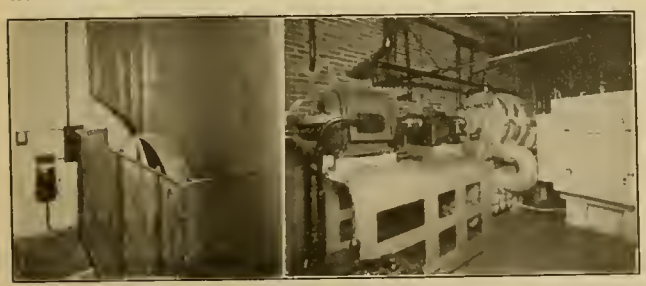
Capitalizing On Theatres' Equipment A Factor With Tucker

Our ability to judge a man's work is confined to the material we receive from him and a general opinion that we try to form solely by reason of his correspondence from time to time with the Club's chairman.



Taking this method as a standard for drawing any particular conclusions should put Stewart B. Tucker in a spot to be classed as a showman, not only well acquainted with every angle of showmanship, but possessed of the ability to put such knowledge to profitable use.

Tucker's name is by no means a strange one on the Round Table Club pages. You must all recall at various times some of the interesting campaigns which he successfully engineered and many of you have commented in your letters to Club headquarters on his type of work.

We have been laying some stress upon the one important phase of a manager's job dealing with the proper maintenance and selling of his equipment as a means of creating added interest toward the theatre.

At this time we are grouping together four photographs, three showing various shops of his air-conditioning plant, and the fourth the front of the theatre, with a sign which, while not very clear due to the reduction in the size of the photograph, sets forth the fact that they are keeping their theatre cool and comfortable with manufactured weather, and we particularly like his emphasis on the fact that, while it is always cool, it is never cold.

Another point about the photographs which creates a lot of admiration for this showman is the immaculate appearance of the rooms in the cellar where this machinery is located. You may recall that from time to time we have stressed the importance of not only cleaning up the spots where the patron never visits, but to keep them clean, and unless these photographs are lying, then Tucker once again warrants favorable mention.

Many showmen, and circuits as well, for that matter, have an impression that the installation of refrigeration or air-conditioning equipment is too expensive to even consider. Well, from my point of view, and apparently this viewpoint is substantiated by many showmen the world over, you can capitalize on the equipment as well as making it an important factor in your theatre's operation.

In addition to using his air-conditioning plant for advertising purposes, he has made a study of this part of the theatre as well as every other phase so that he is well acquainted with the mechanical end as well as the showman's angle. These are the important points we have been constantly trying to drive home to our many other members and readers.

No doubt, among you other showmen who are taking the time to read this account of Mr. Tucker's showmanship, there are many who are likewise proud of the different equipment in their theatre and we urge them to take photographs and send them in to the chairman so that we can, in turn, set forth the story on these pages to encourage other members to do likewise. Maintenance and equipment constitute, as we have said before, a most important phase of your theatre operation activities and we would gladly devote all the space necessary to giving it the prominence it so well deserves.

Let's hear from you fellows, and thank you, Tucker, for your prompt attention to our request.

BE SAFE—NOT SORRY

The manager who watches his fire-fighting equipment shows that he is on the job and alive to the possibilities of trouble. Therefore he leaves no stone unturned to try and avoid it.

Sometimes poor supervision of standpipe hose and fire extinguishers find such apparatus unfit for use when it is needed. Some managers even boast that they are keeping the overhead down by not recharging the extinguishers or replacing old, worn out hose. If that's economy then we'll have to try ditch-digging rather than recommend it to others.

FIRE—the bane of every showman's existence—is just a remote thought if your house is always ready for such emergencies. Every panic-bolt on the exit doors should be in workable condition, equipment in perfect shape and the staff drilled to meet just such contingencies. Then, and only then, have you fulfilled the obligations and responsibilities which you undertook when you stepped into your job.

It's better to be safe than sorry, and it's much easier on the mind, too.

Dave Borland Had A Peppy Gag In His "Pep" Kid Show

Those Canadian showmen are right on the go. Season after season finds them stepping out and showing the rest of the show world what they can do. And they certainly sell their shows. They don't have to have a special picture in order to make a big splash or pull a business getting stunt; they do it on anything they get a chance.

When "Love Among the Millionaires" played the Metropolitan Theatre in Regina, Canada, Dave Borland, manager of the house, doped out a plan to pep up interest in his kiddie business. Through a tie-up with the manufacturer of a well known brand of cereal he was enabled to procure sample packages which were distributed to the children who attended a designated show. In his ad, Borland inserted the name of the breakfast food, and this also helped his good-will stock with the manufacturer as well as the local dealers in the product.

The kids were well pleased with the special treat he arranged for them, and when they returned home they did a lot of talking about it. And it was talk that would result in good-will for the theatre. Borland is always on the look-out to pull angles of this sort, and we believe you will agree with us that they are certainly valuable.

YOUR USHERS' APPEARANCE

An investment in good snappy uniforms for that portion of your staff coming in contact with the public can be considered a mighty profitable investment if handled in a clean, business-like way.

In selecting a uniform for any attache of your theatre, it is well to keep in mind the type of man or boy who is to wear the uniform. Very often one can walk into theatres, even in the larger cities and find a middle-aged man in a uniform that was primarily designed for a youngster and the reverse can also be found where a youngster is wearing a uniform that would look far better on a middle-aged man.

Why not settle in your own mind, before you buy uniforms, the type of employee to wear the uniform and then to make it, not only practical from the wearing and appearance angle but also from the snap that it puts to the wearer itself.

In discussing the subject of uniforms it is well to keep in mind that you are wasting your money buying uniforms if you do not see that they are kept clean and well pressed at all times.

Another angle worthy of a lot of consideration is the purchasing of a large quantity of white cotton gloves, a sufficient number of them being on hand so that while one batch is being laundered the staff have others to wear. These white gloves lend a great deal of neatness to an otherwise nice looking uniform.

Keep the uniform angle well in mind at all times and be sure that your uniforms are fitted to the wearer and the wearer to the uniform. It's a good angle to watch.

And Banniza Gives His Views On This Important Question

Those showmen who encounter a great deal of difficulty with the problem of chewing gum would do well to follow the example and suggestion advanced by G. P. Banniza, resident manager of the Princess and Delite Theatres in Decatur, Alabama.

Mr. Banniza, like every other manager, has had this problem before him on many occasions and it has caused him no end of trouble in order to satisfy his patrons, especially those who have had the unfortunate experience of getting some of this gum on their clothes.

Banniza has inaugurated a novel stunt wherein he assembled his entire cleaning staff and twice a month inaugurates a "chewing gum day" at which time every seat in the theatre is gone over carefully and chewing gum scrapped from the bottom of the seat as well as any other place where the careless patron is apt to stick it.

There are several good preparations that can be used to soften gum or make it easy to remove from chairs, carpets, floors or furniture and you should have no difficulty in securing these preparations.

This does not imply that Banniza leaves this angle go until there is a large accumulation of chewing gum. As a matter of fact, his cleaners always carry putty scrapers in their pockets and whenever they come across a piece of gum on the floor or carpet, immediately remove it, but he finds the more thorough clean-up more effective and instrumental in keeping the house free of this evil.

As he puts it, the best way to overcome the chewing gum evil is to watch it very closely and in this way avoid much difficulty which the annoyance of gum by patrons getting it on their clothes or shoes and walking out with a grouch causes. Follow Banniza's advice and see if you can't lay stress on the chewing gum evil when checking up on your cleaning staff and thereby overcome one troublesome feature of the manager's job.

Hyde's First Stage Wedding In Montgomery Went Over

Deciding not to use a full-page co-operative spread on his stage wedding at the Paramount Theatre in Montgomery, Ala., Boliver Hyde, city manager of the Publix houses, preferred instead to run a number of ads announcing the co-operating dealers, in the papers each day. The result may be seen in the lay-out we are reproducing below.

As is habitual with stage weddings, when they are handled properly, this one clicked for a wealth of publicity, good-will, and last, but by no means least, business. Hyde's stage wedding was run off in a wonder fashion. The co-operation of the local merchants and the newspapers enabled him to turn out a wedding that was the talk of Montgomery for weeks after.

The dealers, besides donating their merchandise to the popular couple to be married, also dressed up their windows and displayed stills, cards, gifts, and other things relating to the occasion. There were forty-five merchants in on the stunt and it would take a couple of pages for us to list the gifts and show the advertisements that the dealers contributed towards the success of the affair. Hyde secured a car from the auto agency, ring from the jewelers, clothing, wedding invitations, furniture, and everything else necessary to put over a stage wedding.

For a week in advance the various gifts donated were displayed in the lobby of the theatre, a credit card identifying each dealer with his contribution. On the night of the wedding the house was jammed. Hundreds of persons had to be turned away, and this more than proved the pulling power of Hyde's showmanship. The stage was all set with a special background, the organist featured a new number, lighting effects blended in with the tone of the occasion, and altogether it was one of the most remarkable things that the town had ever seen. This was the first stage wedding Hyde had pulled in Montgomery, as he has not been at the house very long.

We'd like to point out again, that he has hit an excellent angle in his running of the ads and would like to say that if you are going to run a stage wedding this fall, that you give this some consideration.

In one of the ads—the one showing the beauty shoppe—you can see the picture of the bride, who was given a free permanent wave. This litle picture in the ad enhanced its pulling power considerably. There are many little touches of this sort which can be worked out in conjunction with everything you do on your campaign. It's all up to you, if you want to make it an event to be remembered you'll dope out a lot of new ones.

We want to congratulate Bolivar on the success of his work, which, when you view the fact that he is comparatively, a newcomer to the town, was corking showmanship. And we know that when he engineers his next one he is going to introduce plenty of new slants. Are we right Bolivar?

CRASHING HARD-BOILED SCHOOLS

Our attention was recently attracted to an aggressive showman who couldn't be downed no matter what obstacle he encountered.

He was very anxious to create some good-will and co-operation between his theatre and the local high school, but all his overtures were in vain. It was a comparatively new school and handled several thousand students, only three city blocks from his house, yet they would not play ball with him on any of his suggestions.

With the starting of the new school year, he contacted the athletic instructor and sold him on the idea of taking movies of the various activities. The football squad and coach, physical classes, etc. The A. I. became very enthusiastic and went to the principal himself.

Result, they shot about eight hundred feet of picture, including a close-up of the hard-boiled principal, himself, the faculty in a group, etc.

After the pictures have been shown at the theatre for three days, during which time the entire school will be encouraged to view them (and by the principal, himself), the reel will be presented to the school.

Complete Campaign Was Turned Out By Felker For This One

To add still another gag on the "Golden Safe" exploitation material we would like to call attention to F. R. Felker's work in connection with this picture. Mr. Felker, by the way, manages the State Theatre in Omaha, and has been responsible for many original and novel exploitation ideas ever since he was in the theatre.

In this particular campaign on the "Golden Calf" he arranged two unusually fine window-displays and we are picturing them below. In addition he ran a good side light to this campaign by having made up 30,000 paper tape measures, 16 inches long by 2 inches wide, which plugged the picture and told of the Kresge tie-up. Eight thousand of these were put into every outgoing package from the Kresge store and the other 22,000 were distributed from house to house throughout the city. The thing was printed up on good stock material and called attention to the Calf contest and carried, in addition to the exact tape measurement of 16 inches a form to be filled out by those wishing to enter the contest wherein they specified the dimensions of their calf.

There are so many other good gags and side lights to Felker's work on this picture that we wish we had the time and place to allot to them. However, rest assured that here's an important piece of work and "F. R." deserves all the credit in the world for the way he handled it.

Let's hear some more from you, Felker, and convey our regards to our many other friends out your way.

Brown's House Unable To Hold Kids That Showed Up

And up in Canada they take their kiddie business building seriously, too. This is shown in the work that Charles Brown turns out at the Royal Theatre in Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan.

Recently he tied up with a local ice cream dealer and a wholesale jobber to good advantage. The ice cream dealer supplied him with cones to be given away to the kids at the Saturday matinee. The wholesale jobber furnished him with scribblers for use by the children at school. The scribblers carried an ad for a certain product. In order to give the gag a good plug Brown made up a special sign which was placed in the lobby. We are reproducing this so that you can see the methods used by him.

The strength of Brown's showmanship was seen in the mob of kids that stormed the doors of the theatre an hour before opening time. Seven hundred of them were on hand, and as the house seeks only five hundred, the overflow had to be turned away. This was one of the most successful stunts that Brown has pulled at the house, and he is pretty sure, in view of results such as he obtained, to pull it again. We are glad to see that he is taking such an interest in his kiddie business, as this angle is one that has been puzzling showmen. We want to thank him for letting us see how he handles his own particular problem and we hope to hear from him again real soon.

Barry Banged Over Couple On Selling "Animal Crackers"

A. P. Barry, manager of the Rex Theatre in Hendersonville, N. C., has enough pull to enable him to secure the co-operation of his local merchants on any gag he wants to use to sell the attraction playing at his house for its current run.

When he ran "Animal Crackers," he tied up a department store on a guessing contest. The store paid for the printing of 2,000 heralds which the theatre had made up. These heralds played up the title of picture, theatre and playdates as well as giving detailed information about the guessing contest.

In the window of the store was a jar of buttons. Apparently these buttons were laughed off by folks who had seen the Marx Brothers in "Cocoanuts." The copy further continued by saying: "To the 15 persons who estimate nearest the number of buttons in the jar, the store would present a guest ticket to see ANIMAL CRACKERS."

A great many showmen from Barry's part of the country are to be found on our roles, and we'd like you to know that Mr. Barry has also joined the Club. We hope that he will follow up this account with another one giving us the dope on what else he does to keep them lining up at the box-office. We would also like your picture, "A. P.," if you can dig one up for us.

Here's Another To Add To Your File For Next Spring

When a showman can secure the good-will of all the local organizations near his theatre, he certainly knows what to do with opportunity when it knocks; and for that reason we want to tell you a little about Jim Newman, manager of the Strand Theatre in Tampa, Fla., and the special front display he promoted in conjunction with his showing of "Spring Is Here."

Through a tie-up with a well-known Garden Club, he arranged to have them exhibit specimens of their home grown flowers. One hundred and fifty members formed into eighteen circles to enter into competition to decide which of the horticultural specimens were the most beautiful. The awards were to be made by judges in the lobby of the theatre. As a result of this, the local newspapers picked up the story and ran pictures and plenty of other publicity on it. Three special stories were also run in the papers as well as pictures of the display being put on the Women's page.

As you can note from the photo, the flowers on display certainly brightened up the front considerably, and caused a great deal of word-of-mouth comment. This was the first time that the Club had ever cooperated with the theatre and as a result of the success of the campaign, expressed willingness to take part in future ones. And when a showman can get results like that he sure knows his business. What do you think, Jim?

Kane Has Garnered Plenty Of Space From Newspapers

To compute the number of inches of free newspaper space that Tommy Kane has garnered since he has been at the Sequoia Theatre in Redwood City, Calif., would require a couple of adding machines and more time than we can spare. However, at this time we want to give you a little low down on how Kane does it.

Tommy's secret is to keep in touch with all the local events and manage to work them in with the local newspaper. The paper has yet to turn a deaf ear to any of his propositions: for when a showman presents something that is going to be of mutual benefit it is a certainty that attention will he paid that proposition. When the city held its recent election the first thing that Tom did was to scoot over to the newspaper office and arrange to have them shoot him the election returns from the office over to the theatre, where he planned to announce them to his audience. The paper liked the idea. In fact, they liked it so much that they ran a full-page ad announcing that the theatre and a couple of popular radio dealers were going to present them. Plenty of publicity, and at no cost.

Then Kane promoted another with the local newspaper. This time it was a cooking school, sponsored by the sheet. The stunt went to great results. The theatre received much valuable space daily in the newspaper. If Kane had had to pay for the space he received, there would have been a lot of money expended. This sort of go-getting is enabling him to put the Sequoia over.

MASKING THE SCREEN

Having the picture completely covering the screen is still a problem in many theatres, due to the difference in size of sound-on-film and disc.

We have encountered many home-made contraptions designed to eliminate this unfortunate situation, but we wonder whether it wouldn't be best to fix this important matter up once and for all.

And the surprising fact is that many large theatres in key cities are still struggling with the problem. Some of them told me that they had worked out this, that or the other kind of a gadget to eliminate the portion of black screen when they were running sound-on-film. Others just let it go at that and give it little or no thought at all.

Which, like the guy who threw all his bills in the waste basket, is hardly solving his troubles.

We would welcome some "dope" on this angle from those of our members and readers who are no longer troubled with black strips on their screens, Suppose you boys tell us "how" and thereby lend a helping hand to those who don't seem to know how.

Darkened House Was Utilized As Aid To Sell McKoy Show

Not so long ago we showed you how Bob Gary out in Iowa took advantage of the closing of his theatre to get in a good-will plug. And now, James H. McKoy, another of the south's real live-wire showmen, who manages the Olympia Theatre in Miami, Fla., passes along a new one. He advertised his house by means of a closed theatre.

The entrance to the darkened house was covered with beaverboard which had been given a futuristic touch by the artist. On this beaverboard was institutional copy relating to the coolness, etc., of the Olympia Theatre. In the center bottom of the beaverboard was a three-sheet frame in which the current attractions were advertised. And the photo will give you some idea of its effectiveness. The three-sheet was changed weekly and the institutional copy remained intact.

Due to the many motorists and pedestrians passing the theatre, the display proved quite valuable from an advertising standpoint and brought to life a location that might have been absolutely dead.

This stunt—even though a small expenditure was necessary—has more than paid for itself, and we think that if you ever have occasion to use it you will more than take advantage of it.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

RE-COVERING THE SEATS

If the standards and movable parts of your theatre's chairs are in good condition, there is no reason why you should consider going to the expense of reseating the house. You can begin to think of that angle when your chairs are uncomfortable, or way out of date.

But perhaps the covering of those chairs are "seedy" looking, ripped, or patched until they look like the seat of a tramp's trousers. Then your next thought should be of entirely recovering both the seats and the backs.

If you have a real handy man about the theatre, you can secure the material from any number of sources, and at a really reasonable cost, and, taking a small section at a time, recover the entire house.

Here is an angle worthy of your most careful consideration. It will improve the appearance of your house a hundred percent. It will create favorable comment from the patrons, in most cases they will actually believe you have reseated the theatre. And you will have eliminated a condition which, perhaps, makes your theatre look old and worn.

Nice looking chairs are considered a part of every good theatre's equipment, if your theatre is lacking in this respect the blame is yours.

If you cannot make such a move without proper authorization, you might try taking it up with your division manager and home office maintenance department. You will soon find that they are just as anxious as you that your theatre look right.

Ambulance Drew Up To Smoot To Bear Away Laughing Man

He was only in the town a day or so when he started to display the showmanship that made the Capitol in Steubenville, Ohio, one of the leading houses in the state. Oh, yes, we're talking about William L. Hendricks, who, as you know, is now located in Parkersburg, W. Va., taking care of the Smoot and the Lincoln theatres.

Hendricks' first gag was one with which his fellow members are more than familiar—and one which Howard Waugh, too, has heard of—that of the man who laughed himself sick. This was pulled on a knockout scale. The arrival of the ambulance was timed to a "T." At the time the show broke, the shriek of the ambulance's siren was heard up main street and a moment later the vehicle stopped in front of the theatre. The attendants ran in with a stretcher and brought out a man who seemed to be having a fit of laughing. On the sheet which was spread over him was imprinted the copy: "He laughed himself sick at (Picture Theatre)." The crowds didn't know what to make of the stunt as they had never seen it before. And, believe it or not, but the newspaper actually ran a story on it, which leads us to believe that Hendricks must be making contacts mighty fast.

With this live-wire showman operating in Parkersburg, the town is certainly in for a treat, and we can make the statement with conviction because Hendricks tells us that he wants Howard Waugh to know that our pages are going to sizzle with accounts of his work. In the interests of Howard, since we happen to know he is very busy right now, we'll have to reply that it is going to take some corking showmanship to keep the Meridan Sage from forging to the front. Keep your weather eye glued on the Club pages and see what Hendricks and Waugh are doing to sell their shows. All set, Howard!

Fields Featured A Home-Made Tank For "Journey's End"

If there's one thing that E. P. Fields, manager of the Capitol Theatre in Moose Jaw excels in, it is the use of novel displays and street ballyhoos. No matter what picture Fields plays, he is certain to add a number of novel touches to his selling of it. Just a short time ago we showed you a couple of corking fronts he built for the Moose Jaw Rodeo. Now here's some he used for "Journey's End."

In the photos we are showing you can see the "tank" he constructed as a street ballyhoo. The "tank" was made of beaverboard, mounted on a truck chassis. Regular camouflage color schemes lent a very effective tone, and the use of the catchlines used during war times also pepped it up. The truck, manned by two soldiers, cruised about the town and the outlying vicinities, attracting plenty of attention. This proved to be a great medium for business boosting.

Fields' front, as you may note, was also a whiz. Sandbags, machine guns, German trophies, soldiers, shrapnel bombs, flares, everything that could be promoted, was pressed into service. All of the local war vets were present on the opening night, and similar other angles were utilized. Look the pictures over closely and you'll be able to pick out some angles that will prove to be of value to you. And you can use them whenever you get an opportunity. As Fields is well known around his section for the work of this sort that he turns out, we will have some more to pass along in the near future. Keep it up, "E. P.," and let's hear about you creating some new records.

WHAT IS EXPLOITATION?

S. S. SOLOMON
Gives His Slant:

The present-day theatre manager first sets a program plot that yields the ultimate in balance and entertainment value. He then proceeds to sell his show through the medium of newspapers, screen, outside billing, radio, art work, marquee, front and lobby settings and—exploitation.

It is exploitation that we are now concerned with. First and foremost must be considered the practicability of an exploitation stunt, for to exploit is to enhance the potential possibilities of any given program resulting in increased net revenue. Therefore, the success of exploitation is of proportionate value in terms of "Does It Sell Tickets?"

There are two forms of exploitation: Institutional and specific. Institutional promotes openings, policies, atmosphere, location, and treats of distinctive features or personalities such as stage attractions and personality organists. This form of exploitation should be handled with an eye to coverage, focusing attention to your theatre rather than making odious comparisons.

In treating with specific exploitation, we arrive at the backbone of showmanship. Because of its possibilities and extreme scope the ingenuity, ability and resourcefulness of a manager stands out like a sore thumb. Exploitation handled through newspapers may take the form of contests or freak news column crashes; handled through billing, radio or art work, may take the form of attention-getters such as a tie-in or co-operative copy for window merchandising, and treated in such a manner as to forcibly attract the eye or ear.

Ballyhoo is an extreme, radical form of exploitation and runs the gamut of high-pressure merchandising playing essentially on mass psychology. To attempt a brief on ballyhoo would consume volumes and even then could only serve as illustrative copy because successful ballyhooing is extremely concrete as location, prestige, history of previous ballyhoos, opposition, relative costs, and the attitudes of civic authorities, merchants and mass population—all are important factors in ballyhoo promotion.

First and foremost, centralize and organize the contemplated stunt and speak the language of the people you are trying to reach. Ballyhoos must be in keeping with the type of feature or show you are promoting and care should be exercised to eliminate antagonistic problems. For example, one of the first-run theatres in this city had a saddle and oats tie-up in a restaurant window exploiting "Big Boy." Granted that "Big Boy" centers around jockey atmosphere; here is a display that will not only keep the women away, but tends to discourage the merchant to discontinue future tie-ups after realizing that this particular arrangement was highly unsatisfactory for his business.

Then again, ballyhooing a feature of class distinction—as is typical of Gloria Swanson and George Arliss—would be a liability instead of an asset.

Never misrepresent or over-exaggerate to superinduce antagonistic reaction. Ballyhoos should, at all times, supplement rather than initiate a campaign. In some instances ballyhoos are extremely beneficial. In playing "The Sea God" this week we followed lack of sex appeal and, therefore, issued a challenge to every working girl in Youngstown by means of a spontaneous ballyhoo. There was an instantaneous favorable reaction at the box office.

In short, exploitation is a form of advertising that must be handled with an eye to feasibility and is bounded by the sound, sensibilities and merchandising ability of managers whom it pleases us to call "Showmen."

CONTINUING this most important and interesting series, we give you this week the views of "Sig" Solomon, Morris Rosenthal and C. J. Latta, of the Paramount, Youngstown, Ohio; Lyceum, Duluth, Minn.; and the Roger Sherman in New Haven, Conn., respectively.

Next week we will pass along the views of still more wide-awake members.

If you are taking our advice, and following the series, you will note the wide range of re-actions to the question, "What Is Exploitation?"

It's an open discussion; YOU can have your say as well.

ROSENTHAL SAYS:

Exploitation, what crimes have been committed in thy name!

Having witnessed the passing of the old-time ballyhoo with its grass bands, fake stories, lost and stolen jewels and the like run of fake publicity yarns, we are entering a new era of publicity in which fakes have no place and wild yarns are relegated to the back yards. The public also are wise to these pipe dreams from press agents.

Exploitation today, to be 100 per cent effective, must be directly tied up with the picture and must carry some relationship. As an illustration, while playing "Our Blushing Brides" recently we poured rice on the sidewalks and theatre entrance. This stunt, while costing a dollar or two, created more talk than some expensive campaign would have. The psychology of the idea is that women are always interested in weddings and the sight of scattered rice immediately brings that thought to mind. Couple this with the finding of the rice in front of the theatre and then witnessing the title, "Our Blushing Brides," and you have a complete inexpensive tie-up.

A great many managers still have the impression that exploitation to be effective must be expensive, yet I have seen some of the best campaigns on recent pictures that cost practically nothing. An example of this is the picture, "Manslaughter," which was a natural for cheap publicity. It was a simple matter for us to interest the police department and secure their poles, the use of traffic police, placing of traffic tags on all cars, etc. Other managers throughout the country saw the possibilities along these lines and snapped into it with the result that the theatre secured publicity gratis that could not be purchased.

It often happens that the most simple and inexpensive stunts are productive of box-office grosses. But the most important thing that is overlooked by a good many managers in laying out their campaigns is the picture itself. It is just as foolish to put a big expensive campaign behind a picture that will not live up to its ballyhoo in entertainment value than it is to neglect a sure-fire winner just because it is a good picture.

A poor picture can perhaps be sold to the public once or twice through exploitation, but you can not fool the public all the time, especially if you are going to stay in business week after week. A manager must secure and hold the respect of his community so that when he does endorse a picture occasionally as being outstanding they will believe in him.

One of the best examples of that was shown here last week when this city dedicated its airport. Mr. Anson, our district manager, made arrangements with the committee to book in "The Dawn Patrol" for that week. Some of the country's greatest stunt flyers were booked for the dedication and the theatre was guaranteed their appearance at the midnight show Saturday after the dedication ceremonies, banquet and ball were completed. We received publicity that could not have been bought, and all due to the confidence and respect in which the community holds Mr. Anson.

In conclusion let me add that in preparing our advertising and campaigns, we hold three things in mind. Where, What and When. Unless these three items are sold so that the public knows Where the attraction is playing, What the attraction is and When it is showing, the best campaigns will be only half completed.

Don't miss a single one of this great series. Each showman's opinion opens new avenues for improving your own definition of exploitation. Don't ever be too old to learn.

C. J. LATTA
Puts It This Way:

Exploitation has certain basic principles and in certain fundamentals it is like a sculptor's pile of clay. He makes a subject, then destroys it, then remoulds another from the same material.

"There is nothing new under the sun" runs the old proverb, and how true do we, who labor in the exploitation field, find this. What we have to do today is to put new and attractive angles on old ideas. Naturally a comprehensive selling exploitation campaign starts with a snappy trailer on down through newspapers, billing, radio, mailing lists, attractive lobby displays, novelty throw-aways, street ballyhoos, etc., today each of these needs must be amplified; newspaper campaigns and window displays should carry contests where possible to sell the theatre, as the home of the consistently best and cleanest entertainment, is the big principle and this can be done through getting into local organizations and working with them.

A well organized, courteous theatre staff and a well kept theatre is a big ad in itself for the theatre.

The far visioning manager studies every advertising medium known and, as the sculptor remoulds, so does he create exploitation, winning attention, creating desire, carrying conviction and selling in time. It is like dropping a stone into a millpond: he will see the small waves spread until they reach all shores and the entire surface completely covered.

Meet Milton Wight Who Is Handling The Liberty Theatre

Here's the showman who is capably filling the shoes vacated by Ray Meyersick, who resigned from the management of the Liberty Theatre in Kennewick, Wash., to go to La Grande, Ore., on private business. Meet Milton Wight.

Wight has been in the show game a number of years and he has been turning out some excellent work for the Inland Theatres Circuit. As we are a little late with this story, having left for the Coast a day or so before Milton's application arrived, we'd like you to know that this is his first "meeting" of you all on the Club pages.

We are glad to welcome him into the Club, and we believe we have the Inland Theatres showmen now with us 100%. We hope that Milton will forgive us for our delay; but since it was unavoidable we are sure he will. Are we right, Milton? And listen! We want to hear some more about you very soon, so it's up to you to keep us posted on what's going on around the Liberty Theatre, so that we can keep tabs on your work. Oke?

Delis' Parade For "All Quiet" Was Not So Quiet After All

It certainly looked like a war rally when George Delis, manager of the Capitol and Olympic Theatres in Steubenville, Ohio, set out to sell "All Quiet on the Western Front" through the medium of a street parade held on the opening night.

What a parade! Soldiers, nurses, a band, army tractors, cannon—almost everything that you would see in a real mobilization. Delis did some fast stepping to engineer this one. He went out and tied up the American Legion Forty and Eight Drum Corps to supply the music. The Post also volunteered their Firing Squad and drafted them into service. The Field Artillery came through with a tractor—a real one, too. Delis then tied up with the Fort Steuben Sales Company for the use of five Austin cars. Banners were hung on the cars and also on the cannon caissons.

A number of young men from the town were outfitted in soldier uniforms and pressed into service to parade. Young ladies volunteered their services as nurses, the uniforms being supplied by local merchants. A number of city officials also went into the parade, and their cars formed a welcome addition. It was one of the biggest things that Steubenville had witnessed in a long time. It started at 7:30 on a Saturday evening—one of the busiest nights in Steubenville—when the strees are literally jammed—and did not break up until two and a half hours later, so you can figure out what it must have been like. And the photos will give you a small idea. The local merchants were so pleased with Delis' efforts that the organization representing them complimented him on his work and the successful execution.

As you all know, Delis has just been promoted to the job of handling both of the Warner houses in the city, and though he will be very busy on this important assignment, we are sure he is going to keep us posted and we expect to present some new slants on his showmanship in these pages shortly.

PROJECTION EQUIPMENT

Once called the "heart of the theatre," the projection room has now taken on added importance and is both the heart and the soul of the theatre.

Here centers, practically everything pertaining to your screen entertainment. Therefore, if you are alive to the possibilities of trouble from this source, you will be wise to keep a watchful eye on your booth to make sure that every detail of its equipment is in good workable condition.

Foolish economy in the booth can become the most expensive folly in the entire operation of your theatre. Here starts the trouble which can end in dissatisfied patrons, refunded admissions and absolute loss of business. Here is where YOU, and no one else, should keep a watchful eye.

Equipment should never be allowed to get into a run-down condition, it's much cheaper to overhaul or replace parts that are apt to give trouble. And here is where money can be spent with the feeling that you are spending it wisely. Every dollar paid out for improved booth equipment and adding to the efficiency of your projection is money well spent.

It is neither our intention nor mission to suggest this or that kind of equipment, but any good showman would make it a point to know all about the various improvements constantly being perfected and which adds considerably to the proper presentation of their shows.

Don't take your booth for granted. It's something which requires constant attention and supervision if you are to insure yourself against costly breakdowns and replacements.

Airplane Dropped Tickets As Part Of Hof's Ace Campaign

The residents of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., certainly craned their necks to "look up" at the ballyhoo that H. P. Hof, manager of the Bardavon Theatre, used to exploit "The Dawn Patrol."

On opening day of picture, an aeroplane flew over the city, dropping 2,000 white tickets carrying copy about the picture, theatre and playdates as well as mentioning that if the ticket was "red" it would entitle that person to attend any matinee showing of the picture as the guest of the theatre. Among the 2,000 white tickets were 20 red ones. Sixteen of the 20 red tickets were turned in at the box-office.

Before dropping the tickets, the plane flew low over the city for quite a while and also stunted, thereby attracting a great deal of attention. It was also noted in the "Dawn Patrol" newspaper ad that the "Leader of the Dawn Patrol" would fly over Poughkeepsie at noon on the opening day.

Hof is active on other lines also. He knows his town pretty well, and being acquainted with the local societies enabled him to interest the local German Singing Society in "All Quiet on the Western Front" by mailing announcements in German to them.

The announcements were neatly gotton up and undoubtedly helped to swell the attendances during the picture's run. The German Society also permitted cards to be placed in their headquarters windows; the cards playing up the picture, theatre and playdates.

Hof also appealed to the ex-service men by inviting the American Legion officials to a private screening of the picture. The Legion officials, in turn, praised the picture highly to their comrades and urged them to see it.

Since he has been located in Poughkeepsie, Hof has been giving the town some fine showmanship and his efforts are represented often on our pages.

Holden Florida Regional Chairman!

When Wally Allen vacated his berth down in Florida and came up north to sell shows for Loew, he automatically resigned from his position as Regional Chairman for the State of Florida.

After a week or so of deliberation, the Managers' Round Table Club takes pleasure in announcing the appointment of the new Regional Chairman, Earle Holden, manager of the Fairfax Theatre in Miami.

Having been one of the most active members of the Club for the past two years, it seemed only natural that the place should fall to Holden, and we are more than pleased to be able to offer it to him. His new duties, though, will not excuse him from being an active member; that's where the catch comes in. The Regional Chairman has to be more active than an active member!

Well, Earle, we know that you are capable of filling any of the above qualifications. So let's have some of that speed that you display down in your district and see if you can't do to Florida what Pete Egan and Wally Allan have done for Canada, along the lines of showman representation on the Club pages.

Limerick Contest Helped Watson to Crash Newspaper

It takes showman personality to land free space in the newspapers of big cities and we believe that J. E. Watson, manager of the Broad Theatre in Columbus, Ohio, must possess it; for how else could he run a limerick contest in one of the biggest papers as an aid to his show selling?

The following is a copy of one of the advance notices that appeared in the Columbus Citizen on the Limerick Contest:

"Do they intrigue you? When you see four lines of one with the fifth and 'punch' line left to the reader, do you itch to seize a pen or a pencil and fill in the missing words? If you do, here is your chance.

"The Columbus Citizen announces its Limerick Contest, starting Tuesday. Every day through to Friday, The Citizen will print four lines of a limerick. To those readers who send in the best answers The Citizen will award 44 tickets to Loew's Broad Theatre to see Norma Shearer in 'Let Us Be Gay,' which opens Saturday.

"Now get this. Read carefully the following four lines of verse, fill in the vacant line, and mail into the Limerick Contest Editor as soon as possible. Here is the first one: 'Norma Shearer is coming, they say, In a picture called 'Let Us Be Gay,' So now is the time, To round out this rhyme, ———.

"Other limericks will appear on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday.

"Eleven prizes will be awarded each day. First prize answer will receive four tickets; the second, two tickets, and the next five will receive one ticket each."

The Columbus Citizen received hundreds of replies to this interesting contest, and it was a great success.

Limericks, so it seems, are a big favorite with any number of persons. Perhaps your local editor would appreciate it if you should propose a tie-up of this sort. Remember, you can use it on any picture, and there's plenty of angles can be injected into it. Listen, Mr. Watson; we've an idea that you are pulling some fine showmanship out in Columbus. Let us in on it, will you, so that we can pass it along?

Johnson & Polacek Form New Combine At Robb Theatres

Give Heinie Johnson a paint brush and something on which to apply paint and he'll turn out a display that is a display. And then if Fred Polacek is with him on the selling of the picture, for which Heinie paints the display, you have a crack combination that means business for the R. & R. Ritz Theatre in Big Spring, Texas.

Allowed full sway by Mr. J. Y. Robb, the house manager and one of the owners of the chain, this team has been turning out some fine stuff. In the past we presented only Heinie with his display work, but now we want to introduce you to Fred Polacek, the assistant manager of the house, who, as Heinie says "is something of an exploitation genius." Welcome into the Club, Fred.

In the photos we are showing, you can get a little dope on Polacek's work in the picture of the knockout street ballyhoo arranged for the selling of "The Dawn Patrol." This street ballyhoo was a plane built on a miniature automobile, the car measuring four feet long and about three feet wide. The plane itself measured eight feet wide and twelve feet long. The motor in the car was a motorboat engine, and by running a straight exhaust, it proved to be one of the most effective stunts the theatre had used for some time. The rather high-powered motor in the car had the speed and power to carry the plane in and around traffic safely, sometimes with too much safety—as the curious natives would gather around to look at it.

The ballyhoo stopped them all, young and old. The roar of the exhaust resembled that of an airplane engine on the take-off and this attracted considerable attention and comment. Results were equally as good when the plane was parked in a roped-off section in front of the theatre. It was a beauty as regards colors, being checkered in white and lavender with Iron Crosses and lettering in black and red. Of course, Heinie did the painting.

The lobby display was also a corker. One of the pieces of which we are showing. Both sides of the lobby were covered with large paintings of No Man's Land. The scenes depicted early morning on the battlefront. Cut-out airplanes were placed in combat formations. The title of the picture was in cut-out tinseled letters. Posters were also used. The posters were painted in flashy, eye-arresting colors. The entire campaign for "The Dawn Patrol" clicked from the moment it was started, and Heinie authorizes us to challenge any city of 10,000 to produce like effects. So if you have anything special, shoot it on to us so that we can present it on our pages and let your fellow members look it over.

Oke Heinie, and remember we are looking forward to seeing what you and Fred are going to do with the new season's products.

Blackface Ushers Plugged Moran And Mack Film In Town

Comic ballyhoos are used by a great deal by the showmen down South, and we notice that E. B. Hands, Jr., manager of the Saenger Theatre in Texarkana, Tex., is right up in the front when it comes to turning out stunts of this sort. The latest one that he used was in conjunction with "Anybody's War," when two of his ushers were pressed into service to tell Texarkana about the picture.

The two ushers, black-faced, and attired in regulation army uniforms and iron hats paraded the streets, especially during the rush hours. Both men carried signs on their back advertising the attraction as well as passing out cards on which was forceful selling copy about the picture, theatre and playdates. Hands also had the use of a grocery store window in which he used a huge pile of potatoes with a cut-out of the Two Black Crows protruding just above the heap. The cut-out showed the Crows in the act of peeling potatoes.

Both of these stunts were laugh-getters and we'd like to point out that it can be used on any number of films; and inexpensively too, as the uniforms might be procured from the local American Legion or other military post. Okay, "E. B.," we guess we don't have to say that your stunts pulled them in to the box-office since they talk for themselves. And we hope that your future stunts are going to do the same. Right?

Exton Passed Out Ducats To Kids Who Brought Their Dogs

Through a tie-up with one of his local papers, William Exton, manager of the Rivoli Theatre in Muncie, Ind., effected a good gag to help sell 'Anybody's War."

A free admission was granted to any kid bringing a dog. When the papers broke with the story, which was run in advance, kids appeared at the theatre with all kinds of dogs. At the theatre they were presented with tickets measuring 14 x 22 inches. The kids, carrying dog and ticket, walked home and for the next day or so all that you could hear about the town was that the kids were going to see the picture free. This proved to be very advantageous publicity, particularly so since on the opening day, traffic was stopped for an hour. The show started at 12:45 and all of the kids flocked in front of the theatre an hour before starting time, making walking an impossibility.

This is Mr. Exton's first contribution to the Club pages and we are sure that when he turns out work like this, he wants to have it represented. And listen, Bill, why not send us in a photo of yourself along with your next contribution so that we can give you a regular introduction?

RADIO PLUS SOUND PLANT

Russell Cohen, well-known exhibitor in the east, with the aid of his projectionist, devised a home-made arrangement whereby they can hook their horns back stage onto a radio located in the manager's office. In this way they are nightly presenting several popular broadcasts which are more than clicking with the audiences out in Springfield Gardens, Long Island, N. Y.

We were just wondering whether this suggestion could mean anything to a lot of other live-wire showmen who are at present presenting radio programs from the stage via a regular set.

GILMAN'S VALUABLE ANGLE

S. A. Gilman, manager of the Parkway Theatre in Baltimore for the Loew Circuit, comes forward with one of the best suggestions offered in a long time.

He has arranged to place weekly schedules in neat leather frames and easels in the lobby or with the telephone operators of the large apartment houses and apartment hotels in the neighborhood of the Parkway Theatre.

This has become so firmly embedded in the minds of the residents of these buildings that they make it a regular practice of 'phoning the switchboard operator or else looking at the schedules themselves. In this way they know the exact time of the starting of shows and so gauge their attendance at the theatre accordingly.

Here's one that everyone in the show business can take advantage of if they are on their toes. We hope that it will be followed up by many more from Mr. Gilman.

Vernon Reaver Put Over A Real Campaign On "Dixiana"

What a campaign Vernon Reaver, manager of the Ritz Theatre in Birmingham, Ala., turned out to sell "Dixiana" when it played the local house recently.

It was Reaver's idea to sell the film, not only to the residents of Birmingham, but to the whole state, as well. To accomplish this he had to display some showmanship. And it was! All of the roads leading into town were covered. In town 100 12-sheet cloth banners were tacked on prominent wall locations four weeks prior to opening. The picture was billed in circus style on all of the available billboards. A parade was held every day consisting of the float we are showing. Seventeen boys in Mardi Gras costumes, accompanied by the Police band preceded the float. The parade was started at noon at the theatre, from which it went to a central point of the town where thousands of people gazed at it. The main street of the town, as the accompanying photo shows, was decorated for three blocks with Confederate flags. Miss Dixiana, who was a feature of the float ballyhoo, received lots of publicity. Every store in town carried some sort of a plug on the film.

To top off his campaign, Reaver got a break when the circus came in town by having them announce at the afternoon and evening shows, the playdate and title of the picture. This was the first time such a thing had ever been done by the theatre. They also permitted Reaver to place a banner on one of the elephants. The banner was seen by many people when the regular circus parade was held. Capacity business was the order of the day and night when the film opened. The house was jammed at every show. Birmingham had never seen so complete an exhibition of show selling and they showed their appreciation for Reaver's efforts by attending en masse. We think he deserves a compliment for his work, particularly as he works just as hard to sell every picture that comes to his house. As you all know, he has been turning out some fine stuff at the Ritz, and we look forward to presenting more.

Plenty Of Publicity Came Brown's Way On "Dawn Patrol"

H. C. Brown, manager of the Modjeska Theatre, Augusta, Ga., got an avalanche of publicity for "The Dawn Patrol" when he arranged for the staging of an air circus.

The air circus was made possible through a tie-up with local aviators; the event being pulled on Sunday afternoon prior to the picture's Monday opening. The novelties offered at the air circus consisted of stunt flying, wing walking and parachute jumping.

Signs posted about the aviation field stated that passes would be given to persons to see "The Dawn Patrol" by taking a ride in one of the planes; with the usual fare being charged for an aeroplane ride.

During the afternoon, cards were dropped over the field—numbered from 1 to 3,000, advertising the picture and stating that certain numbers were to be posted on a card in the lobby of the Modjeska and the ones holding the corresponding numbers would receive a guest ticket to see the picture.

The ticket sellers at the aviation field, in addition to selling the 5,000 people the idea of taking an aeroplane ride, also barked out the announcement at different intervals that "Dawn Patrol" was playing at the Modjeska for the week of August 18.

Brown also had his theatre front and marquee and lobby appropriately decorated for the occasion. A huge propeller made out of beaver board was placed on top of the marquee—and this was made to go by hooking it to a motor. Just about the propeller was the title of the picture in four-foot electric-lighted letters.

The title of the picture was worked around the propeller, the letters being about four feet high. This was the first time that a stunt of this sort had been pulled in the town and the interest it created was sensational. We hope that Mr. Brown will pass along some more of these accounts to us, and that we will have a photo or two to present with it. What do you say, "H. C."?

Dick Wright Still Right There With Noted Show Selling

Give him a town where he can let his showmanship run rampant and you'll generally find that Dick Wright can pull some great stuff. And that's exactly what he was doing out in Akron, Ohio, where he was handling the Strand Theatre for the Warner outfit.

As many of his friends and fellow members in the Round Table Club know, Dick has been in the show game for a great many years. He can remember way back when. And when you can do that it means that you have been in the show game and you know the racket. Anyway, we want to pass along a sample of Dick's work so that you can see what he has done since leaving the Warner Theatre in Pittsburgh, where he established quite some rep for himself.

We are showing in the photo the huge sign that he secured permission to place up on the main street as a plug for the silver anniversary. And, believe us, it took plenty of phenagling, persuasion and what not on Dick's part to get it, too. The letters are five feet high and silver with a black border around them. It can be seen for blocks up and down the street and no pedestrian goes by, or autoist, either, without stopping to look and comment on it. The angle is one that has had Akron batting its eyelashes and blinking its eyes. And, oh, yes, we want to say that the showman whose picture is presented with this story is none other than Dick, himself.

And according to the send-off that Feinman gives you, Irving, it won't be long before you are hanging up a membership certificate on the wall of a house you are managing yourself.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

THEODORE BERT manages the Columbus Theatre in New York City for the Consolidated Circuit. Located as he is, right with a group of showmen who know their stuff, Mr. Bert must be pretty capable. We'd like to have some of your future work, Theodore, so that we can let the rest of the managers on the circuit in on what you are doing to keep them lining up at the box-office from early morning to late at night.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

ROBERT Y. HAMPTON manages the Saenger Theatre in Alexandria, La., for the Publix outfit. The past has been productive of some good work from Lousiana and we are of the opinion that Mr. Hampton is right in with the rest of the crowd when it comes to selling shows. Welcome into the Club, Bob, and keep us in touch with your work.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

A. P. BARRY is the manager of the Rex Theatre in Hendersonville, North Carolina. Mr. Barry sees to it that every attraction that plays his house gets a good break along the selling line, and it is that policy which has made him one of the live wires in his district. Let's have some more of your work, "A. P.," so that we can pass it along.

Welcome These New Members!

W. H. PONTON is the manager of the Carolina Theatre in Fayetteville, N. C., a pretty little town that offers him some good opportunities for show selling, that he more than takes advantage of. In view of the fact that you are always active, "W. H.," we think you ought to keep us well supplied with material. What do you say?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JOHN HESSE manages the Capitol Theatre in Athol, Mass. He comes to the Club proposed for membership by Louis Levine, whom you all know as a showman of wide experience. We understand that Mr. Hesse, too, is well versed in showmanship, so we'd like to hear from him regarding his activities. And we hope he will include his photo-also.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

IRVING STEIN is the manager of the Savoy Theatre in Milwaukee, and it seems to us that his application just about sews that city up 100 per cent Round Table. As there's plenty of wide-awake show-selling going on in Milwaukee we can expect some good stuff from Stein, whenever he engineers it. Right, Irving?

Photos of Members!

THE Club is anxious to publish photographs of every member and would, therefore, appreciate receiving as many as possible for use in future issues of the Club columns. If you have not already done so, PLEASE send us your own photo at once. Thank you.

ROBERT E. WHALL is the latest Canadian showman to join the Club. Mr. Whall is the manager and part owner of the Palace Theatre in Ridgetown, Ontario, Canada. He has been in the show game for a number of years and is right on tap when it comes to delivering the goods. We are sure that he is going to prove as active as his fellow Canadian showmen and members of the Round Table and we look forward to hearing from him soon.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JOE EPSTEIN manages the Omar Theatre in Omaha, Neb., right where showmanship abounds, as past issues of the Club pages will show. Mr. Epstein has been proposed for membership by our friend, W. H. Bergmann. Well, Joe, when "W. H." gives you a send-off that's all the immediate recognition we need to know that you are a showman. However, we expect you to keep us up on your future work, so that we can relay your ideas in the original clearing house.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

ALFRED P. PAGE manages the Liberty Theatre in Springfield, Mass. To us, Springfield has always been synonymous with showmanship as past accounts of work turned out in this city by members of the Club have proven the strength of our statement. Let's have a line on what you are doing to bring them into the theatre, Alfred, so that we can check up on the city.

H. C. MILLER is the manager of the Modjeska Theatre in Augusta, Georgia. Since he has been located in Augusta, Mr. Miller has been showing the city some great stuff, and we intend to pass some of it along in future issues of the Club pages. And by the way, "H. C.," let's have a photo of yourself with your next contribution, will you?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

FRED POLACEK is the Assistant Manager of the R&R Ritz Theatre in Big Spring, Texas, and he comes recommended to the Club by Mr. Robb, the owner of the chain, and also Heinie Johnson, whom you all know as the staff artist for the circuit's houses. We don't have to say anything about Fred as his future work is going to do all his talking for him. By the way, Fred, we'd like to have a photo of yourself and the rest of the boys down your way. How about it?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

FRED LARKIN is the manager of the State Theatre in Sioux Falls, South Dakota. We have been in the other Sioux Falls, but we don't recall going around Mr. Larkin's district, so we are unable to say anything about it right now. However, we hope Fred will help us out with it and give us a few pointers on conditions in his town in order that we may pass along his show selling methods.

DAVID LAWRENCE ★

Needs No Introduction . . .

THE brilliant editor of The United States Daily needs no introduction to executives in the motion picture industry. "David Lawrence says" is a phrase that is heard daily across the luncheon tables wherever business executives gather. Because David Lawrence always has something worthwhile and to the point to say about business, men and methods, Associated Publications is happy to announce that this nationally known student of business affairs, especially as they concern the relationship of government to business, will write a series of broadly informative articles to appear

EVERY WEEK EXCLUSIVELY IN THE ASSOCIATED PUBLICATIONS

These articles, while not dealing specifically with the motion picture industry, will be of absorbing interest, nevertheless, to every individual in this industry. Keen analysis of general business trends and policies by David Lawrence in these articles will be of value to every executive in guiding his individual business course. It is a generally admitted fact that no business man can be alert to his own opportunities unless alert to the direction that business in general is taking. Let Mr. Lawrence help you navigate!

★ Beginning in our Issues of October 21, David Lawrence Presents a Series of Articles of Basic Informational Value to Every Executive.

ALL COLOR ALL TALKING

on comedy entertainment in a brand new series of one-reel novelty comedies

MACK SENNETT BREVITIES

MACK SENNETT BREVITIES bring that "something new under the sun" which every real showman is always looking for. They are good comedy because MACK SENNETT is making them. But they combine a new element of novelty with the comedy—and do it all in natural colors—and all talking, of course.

Schenck Seeks Angel in Hughes; Pathe Control Is Goal with RKO Joining Race

Denies Hughes Buy

Hollywood—Joseph M. Schenck, arriving here Thursday from the Coast, denied that Howard Hughes has acquired an interest in United Artists. He made no mention, however, of the reported deal under way for Hughes to buy into Art Cinema Corp.

Mary Pickford, Schenck stated, has abandoned plans to appear in a New York stage play, intending to continue picture work.

Tear Bombs, Cig Butts, Bottles, One Bad Dream

Chicago—Investigation of the "mystery" of the finding of a tear bomb in a Congress Hotel room which had been vacated by Al Steffes of Minneapolis transfers suspicion from the tear bomb to the author or authors of the story.

F. E. Burke, manager of the Congress, after denying any knowledge of the incident, authorized a MOTION PICTURE NEWS representative to conduct his own investigation with full co-operation from the hotel

Lorentz Rides Into One Jam; Avoids Another

A little matter of mixing names caused embarrassment aplenty to Pare Lorentz, picture critic of Judge, and the Guaranty Trust Company of New York, when, in a recent issue, the scribe stated that the bank had issued a report characterizing the picture companies as "unsound and risky."

Fireworks began to pop over the heads of the bankers, who were innocently blamed for the sock, and the latter in turn leveled their cannon at Lorentz, who rushed into print with the following:

"Some time ago in these columns I claimed that the Guaranty Trust Company of New York had issued a report characterizing the movie companies as unsound and risky. The Guaranty Trust Company, never made such a statement, and I'm sorry the whole thing came up. I'm not going to make a mistake again and attempt to name the bank that did issue such a report (it really wasn't just an idea that I made up—my information was confidential and supposedly authoritative, but mixed up on its banks, and I'm not going to attempt to start all over again)."

To which one nit-wit replied, "Now I'll tell one."

U. A. Chief to Sell 50% of Art Cinema Interest; Slashes Salaries

Joseph M. Schenck's efforts to obtain new financing through proposed sale of an interest in Art Cinema Corp. to Howard Hughes, coupled with a plan for acquisition of Pathe to help seal the bargain, may precipitate a race between Schenck and Radio-Keith - Orpheum to get control of Pathe.

Joseph M. Schenck

Having instituted in New York drastic moves to cut overhead through pruning of personnel and a general 10 per cent reduction in salaries, Schenck has returned to the Coast, where negotiations are reported being continued to dispose of a 50 per cent interest in Art Cinema with Hughes as the buyer. This is the second maneuvre to holster finances of the production company, which some months ago borrowed $3,000,000 from Paramount.

Pathe figures in the proposed deal as an added attraction, it is said, its stars being wanted to strengthen the United Artists array. Joseph P. Kennedy is reported to have offered to sell control to Schenck at various times, but the deal now is reported as "very hot."

Radio Ready to Act

Meanwhile, Radio does not intend to let the Pathe plum slip through its fingers, it is indicated, with negotiations now under way between David Sarnoff and Elisha Walker of the Bancamerica-Blair banking group. Radio has sought to make a deal on various occasions, it is stated, wanting par-

RKO-Pathe Terms

Under terms of the deal reported under way between David Sarnoff and Elisha Walker, Radio would buy 1,000,000 shares of Class B common and 250,000 shares of Class A common stock of Pathe. The latter has outstanding $5,500,000 in bonds, but there is no provision for these to be taken over by Radio, it is said, which would mean that Pathe's identity would be retained and operations of the organization maintained as an individual entity.

"Bad Business"

"All wet" was the manner in which one sales department head characterized salary reductions being made to pare overhead.

"At a time when the industry needs real push to get ahead it is fallacy to cut salaries, thus weakening employee morale," he said. "It would have been okeh if when the companies were making big dough they had boosted salaries, but they didn't, so cuts now not only are unfair but bad business."

'Wolf' Cries Are Drowned Out By Business Cheers

While some companies in the industry are crying "wolf," pruning their personnel and cutting salaries, business generally is on the upswing with wages holding firm, states a national survey presented to the National Association of Manufacturers at its annual convention in New York.

Although the trade slump has been widespread, it has not been sufficient to "weaken the confidence of understanding minds in the essential parts of our American economic system," John E. Edgerton, woolen mill head, told the convention.

Sap Stunt Starts Salary Slash Idea in Big Brain

One of the week's big laughs in New York film circles was the result of one of those highly formal interviews which a second string distributor condescended to grant to a weekly trade paper reporter.

The big shot distrib, being a busy, high-powered executive, instructed his press agent to collaborate with the newshound on a set of questions which could be submitted at the interview. Much of his "valuable" time would be saved by such a method, he pointed out.

The P. A. and the scribe got together and the former, hearing rumblings of personnel cuts and salary slashes, hit upon the bright idea of including a feeler in the question line-up. This done, the reporter was ushered into the sanctum-sanctorum of the big gun and everything went over as per schedule.

The interview was fast drawing to a close

Vol. XLII NEW YORK CITY, OCTOBER 11, 1930 No. 15

THE PENNY IS MIGHTIER THAN THE DOLLAR

WHILE Hollywood's mahogany chair-warmers and New York's affirmative executives continue to sit in repose, the slashing of microscopic salaries continues without interruption. The payroll shrinks in proportion to the rising satisfaction of the pygmy brain that sponsors the cut and the business ship of state assumes even keel. Perhaps.

It's hard to believe that seasoned film men who profess to know their business can blind themselves so completely to the light. They know, or they should, how sensitive a product they deal in. They know, or should, that the value of a picture fluctuates like the wind; that what the salesman, for instance, can get in price depends on his ability, plus his enthusiasm, to put over his deals.

Ant Hills Bucking Mountains

YET, overlooking the mountains in waste, they permit annihilation of the ant hills, and, by their very actions, allow the stamina of their men in the field to face disintegration.

How can a go-getter salesman be expected to knock 'em dead when in the back of his mind he wonders when the price-slashing farce enacted in the home office will reach him? How, conceivably, can the rank and file be expected to keep that shoulder to the wheel when the reward is either discharge or salary reduction the moment bad pictures or economic depression throw the tremors of panic into the front office?

And why, will some enlightened soul inform us, should it be necessary to remind the great brains of the industry how basically unsound is a business precept so obviously founded on lack of vision?

The Rally of the Penny-Savers

THIS column touched on the situation when the penny-savers first got their bright idea. An important man, who agrees with the writer that the procedure is wet and thereby stamps himself as a lone wolf among his executive compatriots, suggested the other day that it might be well to repeat what was published at the time. Here it is:

"The gladiator play boys of ancient Rome never supplied their toga-bedecked citizenry with a more entrancing, if not quite so futile, spectacle than is being unfolded today in some of our best film circles.

Spotlight on Some Truths

"THE bankers are looking the other way when flotations of new issues are broached. Cash is consequently hard to get. Theatre grosses, until two weeks ago, were more low than high, while here in New York circuit managers looked glum, felt that way and didn't know what to do about it.

"So from the high places came the word and picayune retrenchment was started on its smallish way. Publicity men were fired. Also advertising men. Clerks were dismissed, stenos let out and some consciences thereby eased.

"In New York there are high-priced incompetents tenaciously holding their fat jobs. They are relatives, political henchmen of the man in the saddle or they know where the body is buried."

When the Wash-Up Comes

WHEN the adding machines stop clicking and grosses are finally tallied, the outfits that squandered morale to save a few thousands might well take mental inventory. If they are honest and at all penetrating in their diagnosis, the conclusion will be inevitable.

In this business, money has to be spent to bring money back. Rant against it, scoff at it, or even pooh-pooh it. Thirty years of motion pictures have demonstrated this to be the truth.

It's inescapable.

Mayor Walker of New York Resigning Post Jan. 1 to Join Fox Legal Staff?

Come Down to Earth, Bo!

There's a certain element on the staffs of Broadway picture palaces which is due for a healthy kick in the pants because of its totally uncalled-for high-hattin' attitude when asked for press information. Some of them are managers, while others are alleged press agents, who are being paid only to publicize the film and stage attractions of their respective theatres, which job they sorely fall down on when a newshound attempts to secure the dope on current picture attractions.

This week a reporter called the New York Strand no less than four times for names of attractions on the current program, and then gave it up as a bad job. "Too busy," was the theatre's reply.

Some noive.

Future Activity Of William Fox Puzzle on Coast

Los Angeles—Status of William Fox, as respects his reported agreement with Fox Film, to serve as adviser for a five-year period, is being speculated upon here in view of the deal with H. L. Gumbiner. Fox is said to be the owner of the site on which Gumbiner's new house is being built and is to operate the office building which is to be a part of the structure.

Gumbiner's new theatre is to open in January and, it is declared, will be the most pretentious house west of Chicago. There is an estimated $2,500,000 involved in the venture. A number of innovations will feature the theatre.

Whether Fox is to be cut in on the profits of the theatre, or appear only in the part of landlord, has not been made clear.

Gumbiner is the owner of the Tower, 950-seat house which he built at a reported cost of $426,000. With the cost of the land, running the total well over $1,000,000, many were skeptical, saying Gumbiner couldn't come out on the venture, but he proved otherwise by rapidly getting back his investment, with the house continuing in the black.

MacLean and Boasberg to RKO Plant as Producers

Hollywood—From acting to supervising is Douglas MacLean's hop in production. The former Ince and Christie star has been signed by RKO as an associate producer and will first handle the Wheeler-Woolsey comedy to follow "Hook, Line and Sinker."

Al Boasberg, gag man, has also joined Radio in a capacity similar to MacLean's. He has been given no assignment as yet.

Champion of Industry Decides To Return; Was M.P.T.O.A. Counsel; Fought Cohen

(Copyright, 1930, by Motion Picture News. Reproduction permitted only with credit.)

James J. Walker, mayor of New York, is preparing to return to the picture business, it is learned on reliable authority. The veteran former counsel of the M.P.T.O.A. is to hand in his resignation Jan. 1 as chief executive of the world's largest city to join the legal department of Fox, states this authority.

Report that Mayor Walker was joining Fox was promptly denied when it first cropped up several weeks ago, but the story now is that the mayor has definitely decided to cast his lot with that organization.

Quits After Cohen Fight

Walker was for several years the general counsel of the M.P.T.O.A., following his projection into the limelight at the Cleveland convention, where the organization was formed. He resigned in 1922 at the Washington convention after a squabble with the then president, Sydney S. Cohen, who charged him with "sitting at Will H. Hays' feet."

He had been a dominant figure in exhibitor work, touring the nation with independence as his battle cry. He led the fight against producer-distributor theatre operation, which was climaxed at the Minneapolis convention in 1921, where Adolph Zukor promised that Paramount would cease acquiring and building theatres. At that time he was minority leader in the New York State Senate, where he always championed the industry's cause.

Scandals Not an Influence

Even before the present investigations into New York scandals, Mayor Walker had determined to resign to join Fox, it is declared. It was rumored in the New York press also that he was to supplant Will H. Hays.

When the story was first bruited about in late August, Motion Picture News telegraphed Mayor Walker for comment. The wire was never answered.

The Insiders' Outlook

...really take it on the chin for those two hundred thousand iron men?

Is It True That—

A certain figure, looming large in public life, is about to abandon politics in favor of a big job with one of the major producer-distributor-exhibitors?

If a theatre executive around New York pried himself loose from a many chair more of... into the fold...

More Truth Than Poetry

Motion picture engineering "wizards" and technical "experts" are due for the shock of a lifetime shortly, when a noted personality makes known the details of a new invention which has only just emerged from his laboratory.

The fact that the basic thought for its development has never occurred to anyone before, so far as is known, is most amazing because of its obviousness.

Motion Picture News learns exclusively that the device may result in the solution of one of the industry's greatest technical problems, possibly saving millions to producers and exhibitors in equipment, and, if it materializes, revolutionizing the particular branch for which it is intended.

Johnny Bull to Grab 60 Houses In the States

British interests will force British pictures upon the American market, going directly to fans in this country through a string of 60 theatres in as many key towns widely scattered over the entire country.

Product from Great Britain, except in rare instances, has been unable to make headway in this country because of inability to secure distribution through the big companies, which control a healthy slice of the exhibition field, while independent distributors have not evidenced any enthusiasm for the foreign-made stuff and usually steer clear of it.

Using the Cohan Broadway house in New York as the first stands, Capt. Harold Auten, understood to be acting on behalf of British International, London, and a group of English bankers, has under consideration building up the contemplated string of 60. Majority will have a weekly change policy.

N. W. "Big Shot" May Sock Back in M-G-M Suit

Minneapolis—Something akin to an explosion which will be heard throughout the Northwest is expected to occur when and if M-G-M goes through with its suit against Ed Backus of the Grand Theatre Co., International Falls, Minn., for alleged breach of contract. For Backus, who is a member of the Backus-Brooks Lumber Co., is by way of being one of the Northwest's wealthiest men, and one of the leading political powers of the Northwest.

About $11,000 is involved in the suit, with Backus contending he rates an adjustment on the film rentals concerned. With M-G-M understood to be prepared to prosecute its claim, retaliation is anticipated.

INSIDERS'

FEARFUL, perhaps, that history might repeat itself, the brothers Warner are said to have safeguarded themselves against adversity to the tune of a $20,000,000 trust fund. The dough is said to be in escrow and to be inaccessible for many years to come.

Up to the time of the entrance of John J. Raskob, the brothers are said to have set aside about $8,000,000, but the Raskob deal swelled the bankroll considerably. The national Democratic chairman is said to have purchased 200,000 shares of the common at $40 per share.

Whenever you ask Harry Warner about Raskob, he will tell you that after all his company's stock is for sale in the open market and that if Raskob, or any other Wall Street operator, is anxious to buy, the principal requisite is the do-re-mi with which to do so.

But up and down the main stem, the query on everybody's tongue is this:

"What do you hear about Warners?"

Speculation is widespread over the immediate future. The bankers, as represented by Dick Hoyt and Walter Sachs, are pretty much the big boys these days. And what they say is the McCoy in the Warner ranks.

Mental Gymnastics

Just what inspired Hayden Stone's return to picture financing is another question that is stirring comment. After the Richard Hoyt Syndicate had secured control of West Coast and disposed of it to Fox in the days when the William's phalanx was thundering down the road to theatre supremacy, John Dillon, Hoyt's trusty sidekick, openly declared he and his company were out of the business.

Then, for no reason which seemed apparent, Hayden, Stone stepped neatly into the Warner mix-up. It all seemed contrary to Hoyle and the pattern which the dopesters had worked out.

The unexpressed, but persistently reported, interest behind the move is declared to be the Du Ponts. The Wilmington crowd has a neat number of millions on the loose with apparently no place to go. Other bankers found the celluloid haven a comfortable one in which to repose. Besides, the Du Ponts manufacture raw stock and George Eastman for many years has been having pretty much of his own way in that important by-product. From there, you can piece the puzzle together without further help from The Insiders.

One extremely important banker remarked the other day and was sorry immediately thereafter that he had spoken:

"Keep your eye on the Du Pont interests. The Wall Street underground has it that they are ready to walk into the picture business with a thud that will rock the foundations of the industry."

Beyond that he would say nothing.

There's one other angle on the Warner situation that rates attention. Then on to other matters.

Hoyt knows Spyros Skouras. Matter of fact, a choice story making the rounds in limited fashion is that it might have been the gentleman from St. Looey who influenced Hoyt to bring Hayden, Stone into the picture.

Later developments concerning Skouras' spot in the Warner set-up may offer proof that this report has a definite foundation in fact. There are those who insist they are right that Skouras will shortly have considerable more to say in the Warner management than the conduct of the theatre chain, although, in these days of asthmatic box-offices, that is enough of a worry. The Hoyt-Skouras association would imply much faith in the latter by the former. Etc., etc.

Can You Guess—

WHAT "big" film man was so humiliated over a recent business boner that he made a hurried and none-too-graceful exit for the Coast, after being told he had become the laughing stock of Broadway, to stay there until the odor dries up?

Exactly what is the nature of the questionable "business" arrangement carried on between two New York companies for the past year and how long it will be before the expose which must come will smite the industry between its surprised optics?

Who the leaders in this inside deal are and what the trade will think of their morals once the spotlight is flashed in their direction?

The monicker of the independent producer on the coast, known as the money lender of Hollywood, who has plenty of celebs on the cuff for plenty?

Why is a "w. k. film man" so interested in ascertaining the details of a paragraph appearing recently in this very spot and involving what appears to be a fellow executive?

And what did one of the former's aide-de-camps promise a Motion Picture News reporter if he would supply the lowdown?

In what organization some of the inner workings are being unearthed with a minor executive nursing a peeve doing the unearthing?

How much consternation his research will create if his findings should ever reach the light of day?

Fortune Gone Astray

With wide film being projected into the picture for a test of box office strength, at least, it is interesting to recall the millions John D. Elm would have made out of it—if it clicks—under his former contract with Bill Fox. That agreement, it is said, called for a five per cent of the gross on all pictures using the process over a period of years, but Fox bought it up.

The Grandeur experiment is said to stand General Theatres Equipment $250,000 to date. When first introduced the nut was $100,000, it is said. The cost of designing and manufacturing the machines and cameras is responsible.

It is figured that a change over to wide film will cost the industry as much as did the rush to sound, which is said to have been between $350,000,000 and $500,000,000, with the end not yet in sight. That belief has led to a gentlemen's agreement to hold off on the introduction of wide film until cost of sound is absorbed.

However, with the novelty of talkers already worn off, the situation seems to be changing. Now comes the interesting test between Grandeur and Realife, scheduled next week in New York. Maybe wide film will click to an extent which some of the big operators figure will justify its general introduction.

Fuses, Dynamite, Sparks

Everybody seems to be sidestepping wide film these days—that is, so far as published comment is concerned. But there are a few retentive memories which recall the stand-off attitude on sound assumed by the business until a young warbler named Jolson knocked 'em out of their seats with "The Jazz Singer" in the waning days of 1927 and early 1928.

Towns like Charlotte ditched dates to hold Jolson for something like six weeks and, before anyone quite realized what had transpired, the industry was off on one of its periodic spells of insanity.

Agreements or no, the day a real attraction on wide film begins to wreck box-office records, the stampede will be on to play a return date. Those able to resist the pressure will urge caution, but, take it from an Insider who has been watching this business for years, the tide will refuse to be stemmed.

The spark of one knock-out, smash hit will be sufficient to set the fires of a wide film revolution flaming clear across the nation.

Kennedy Returns

Remember when Joe Kennedy upped and declared he had retired from films in favor of banking?

Some of the industry's oracles fell for it. The Insiders held a meeting, developed what at the time looked like a brainstorm and then expressed the thought in print that Joseph P. had no such idea; that if he had, it wouldn't be long before he changed his mind.

It's come.

You can stop us if we're wrong, but this is what The Insiders see from their Outlook tower:

That Kennedy is figuring in the discussions now being waged between David Sarnoff and Elisha Walker anent the acquisition of Pathe by Radio (You'll find more of this elsewhere.)

That Kennedy has been conversing with Joe Schenck regarding the possibility of a deal between Pathe and United Artists.

That, if United Artists decides to call it a day, Kennedy may be the chap whose job it will be to place the U.A. stars on other programs.

You can't do all that when you're on the retired list.

A New Gadget

Hollywood, the land of previews, is now under the constant surveillance of every major circuit in the field. This is how it works:

Each circuit chain has a spotter whose job it is to cover previews, analyze new product from the b.o. and hurry his opinion through to his superior in New York. In some instances, the spotter is on the payroll of the studio affiliated with the circuit. In other instances, the sleuth operates under special assignment. This criss-cross check-up practically covers every picture made.

This is why it works:

While the big producers are linked together in booking alignments with each other's circuits, it is obviously essential, for instance, for the Warners to know what Paramount is about to spring. Twist it any way you like and the conclusion is the same. Strategic spotting of star names is a very vital factor in successful theatre operation, as is types of pictures. Theatre grosses rise and fall with startling and unexplained rapidity. Any advance information which may have a bearing on bookings is vital information.

Generals and Armies

BACK in '17 or thereabouts when Germany and the Allies were cussing at each other across the trenches, it finally became apparent that, like cooks, too many generals often soured the broth.

So eventually came the decision to appoint a commander-in-chief of the Allied forces. From then on, it seems, the various sectors acted in unison and when one army needed reserves, there was no quibbling. The reserves went in to stem the tide of battle.

This mild dabble into history illustrates what happened between Harold B. Franklin and Harley L. Clarke. Franklin unquestionably did a fine job in building up Fox West Coast to its present enviable position. Harold has always felt that he had contributed a very substantial portion of Fox Film's profits and insisted this was possible because he ran his powerful chain as he saw fit and without anything beyond a perfunctory control from New York.

On the other hand, Clarke felt that, while Franklin was very much of a main drag executive, Fox West Coast was, after all, only one of the children and Fox Film the daddy; that if the parent insisted upon administering a dose of castor oil the child should have been obedient enough to swallow it.

Franklin thought otherwise and said so; the two viewpoints refused to become reconciled and the former is now out. There were other considerations, such as salary and a percentage of the net, but they weren't one-two-three by comparison with the real issue that caused the split.

THE enigmatic Mr. Hughes, after all, will produce "Queer People," the story of Hollywood which has sometimes been described in picture circles as one of the most vicious attacks on Hollywood ever published.

Why?

The Insiders level a question at Hughes which many in the business are thinking. In Hollywood, the commonly accepted yarn is that Hughes bought the picture rights because he was tipped off the authors planned a sequel in which his "Hell's Angels," fetish was the keystone.

If that is correct, those who have the best interests of the business in mind fail to understand why, once having purchased the film rights, Hughes feels he must produce the story, despite the intimation that the venom will be removed. What Hughes apparently has overlooked is the inevitable truth that those who have read "Queer People" will expect to see the picturized version cling to the plot structure and incident of the book. If they don't get it, Hughes will find himself in the position of a producer who is misrepresenting his wares.

If he follows the story text, which obviously he cannot do, he will find himself in the unenviable position of a recognized producer holding up his own business to the ridicule of scoffers.

Will He, Won't He?

Coast gossip is that Alexander Pantages will never serve the one to fifty year prison term imposed for alleged assault. The theatre magnate, who has been granted a new trial, is still a powerful figure on the Coast and there persists in many circles the notion that he was framed.

Another factor is the Pantages theatre in Hollywood. Pantages insisted that his name be retained on the structure, said to represent $2,000,000. With that name on the marquee, the investment would be jeopardized if the Pantages jail term is sustained, Coast observers believe. Fox West Coast is reported to have offered plenty to take Pan's name off the theatre.

The Last Laugh

Maybe Fox isn't giving the merry ha-ha these days to the wiseacres, who emitted a series of loud guffaws when Will Rogers was signed. It was a dumb move, these railbirds insisted, for hadn't Rogers proved more or less of a flop in silents? And wouldn't he surely repeat with a nosedive in talkers?

The laugh is occasioned by the grosses being rolled up by the Roger pictures, which have gone over with such a bang that Fox has hastened to put Will under contract. And to show what the company thinks of him, the inside dope is that the contract calls for a weekly pay check of twenty-five grand, with the comedian scheduled to make three pictures for the 1930-31 program.

Allied to Ignore Zoning Confabs and Seek Federal Aid and Public Backing

Another Switch?

Hollywood—Producers in this movie town are understood to be seriously considering the advisability of a wholesale return to silent versions as a means of breaking into foreign markets.

While full steam ahead will be the order of the day as regards foreign talkers, there are some who believe markets abroad are as yet insufficiently wired to make an appreciable dent, and silents are the only solution for heavy returns until such time as at least a majority of houses are wired.

Paramount Plans Building Program In Foreign Cities

Mergers in the foreign field and possible concentration of theatre outlets won't feaze Paramount. With an eye toward this eventuality, the organization is mapping plans for a quiet, but intensive, theatre building program in all important cities on the Continent.

The company now operates a few houses in English cities, but proposes to swell the list through construction. The plan does not provide for acquisition of existing houses or circuits. The theatre policy in Europe calls for a close working arrangement where possible with important national interests in each field of operation, the plan perhaps going so far as to include a percentage of local capital in the building of the theatres.

The multi-lingual production plan, actively under way in Paris for some months now, figures in the set-up. While Paramount feels talkers in various languages are necessary for maintenance of its exchanges in Europe, it is also figured the good will created thereby will prove to be an important factor in clearing the decks for the organization's theatre building activities.

Lining Up Continental Sites; Graham in Charge

London—Eugene Zukor and Morris Greenberg of the Publix theatre construction department are looking over a number of sites on the Continent, but no construction plans have been formulated as yet. Proposed Paramount expansion will be in the hands of John C. Graham, the company's European chief.

New Fox Contracts

Hollywood—Fox has placed Myrna Loy under long-term contract. Player was formerly with Warners.

The studio has also signed C. Henry Gordon. First assignment is "Once a Sinner."

Protection Snags Result in Decision for Newspaper and Radio Campaign

Prepared to wash its hands of proposed zoning agreements, Allied States Association is planning to go to the public with a campaign against extended protection and block booking.

The association probably will refuse to be a party to any zoning schedules and may even seek Federal relief if any schedules considered unreasonable are adopted. The Brookhart bill is expected to be amended to include a protection provision and may be backed by Allied.

W. A. Steffes, general manager of the Northwest exhibitor unit, will start the ball rolling in the Minneapolis territory with a series of newspaper articles acquainting the public with the association's stand against block booking and protection. Radio broadcasts also will be used.

The Chicago flare-up, attended by the big guns of the organization, put a real crimp into the situation as regards Allied participation.

Leaders of the group take the position that the effort to restrict double-featuring and giveaways is in direct contrast to the consent decree entered in the West Coast case. While that decree concerns only southern California, the association feels that its principles should apply throughout the United States, so far as legality of protection limitations is concerned.

The protection meetings have run into snags in all keys where Allied units are located and it now looks as though Allied will walk out on the meetings altogether.

In his proposed campaign, Steffes will assert that inability of small-town exhibitors to obtain some pictures their patrons want to see due to their limited playing time, which is sewed up by a few company blocks, is hurting the business generally because patrons denied these attractions are resentful. He also will charge that extended protection is for the purpose of driving patrons into towns controlled by the chains, in order to see the pictures denied them by their community theatres.

Et Tu, Junior!

Hollywood — Discovered at last — a place in Hollywood where a Who's Who in the film colony is not observed. It's first come, first served, with a vengeance in local preview houses.

At the advance showing of Paramount's "Morocco" at the Fox Ritz, Carl Laemmle, Jr., and his party of four arrived at 8:15. The S.R.O. sign had been out since 7. Junior managed to get in after some difficulty and was directed to the balcony. There an usher seated the party—on the carpeted stairs.

The Motion Picture News reviewer had to move over to let them sit down.

Salvation Maurry

London — Depression, hard times, shortage of money — everywhere throughout the London trade one hears loud cries of "wolf!" Which prompts one (half) wit to suggest that Maurice Chevalier donate his salary of $20,000 weekly from local stage appearances to starving Londoners in the film business.

This guy, apparently, doesn't know Maurice, who has already established a healthy reputation over in America for "nursing" salary checks, and giving away straw hats in the winter time.

Zoning Battle Is Launched by Sen. Brookhart

Grand Rapids, Mich.—Senator Brookhart has turned his attention to the zoning schedules now being drawn up or planned to various key cities, and believes that extended protection overshadows block booking in importance. As a consequence, he suggests amendment of the anti-discrimination provision of the Clayton Act, so it will apply to all leases as well as sales in interstate commerce.

The senator, who is the author of the bill bearing his name which is designed to prevent block booking, made known his views at the convention here of the Michigan. He urged exhibitors to fight against the practices complained of and to enlist the

Paramount Cuts Down Footage to Increase Action

Hollywood—In a move to obtain greater action in its talkers, Paramount has inaugurated a plan of shooting the least possible footage, then previewing the picture and after that shooting any additional scenes needed. The company has recognized the fault common to talkers—too much dialogue and too little action—and the new plan is an effort to correct this fault. The economy factor also is an important one in the plan.

This week two pictures were previewed. One was pronounced oke, while the other had to go back for repairs. The first was "Morocco," featuring Gary Cooper and Marlene Dietrich.

The picture to go back for repairs was "Sea Legs," the Jack Oakie navy yarn. Victor Heerman first directed the talker and Eddie Sutherland made a number of retakes. However, more sequences and story changes are planned before the talker will be released.

Denver—Negotiations for acquisition of property at 15th and Wellington have been concluded by RKO, and the chain will proceed with original plans to replace the present Orpheum with a $1,000,000 house seating 3,000.

Roxy Units To Be Used In Other Fox Theatres

Mike Marco already has begun policy changes at the Roxy and for the presentation of "The Big Trail," the stage show will be reduced to a minimum and various members of the stage personnel routed to de luxe houses of the Fox circuit.

Allen Glenn, veteran advertising and publicity man and showman, has joined British International Pictures as director of publicity at the George M. Cohan, New York.

Bar "Angels" on Refusal to Omit Drinking Scenes

Toronto—Unwisely advised to buck the Ontario censors when ordered to make cuts in "Hell's Angels," local officials responsible for the picture adopted a policy of all or nothing. As a result they get nothing. The air film is out altogether for this part of Canada, despite two trips to the Parliament buildings and elaborate pleadings. The sponsors are going to make one more trial later to get it passed.

British airmen who saw Hughes' picture in the United States had written to government officials here protesting against mess scenes showing Royal Air Force officers drinking. These were ordered cut. Refusal to do so resulted in a ban.

The picture had a tentative 5-week booking at the Shubert legit house, Royal Alexandra.

"Whoopee" Demonstrates the Value of Color and Presages Its Return

Color films, which took it on the chin owing to the manner in which they were dumped on the market last season, are due for a comeback in 1930-31, in the opinion of a number of executives. Steady improvement in coloring, plus a realization that color must be used with quality pictures if it is to be successful, will be contributing factors, it is expected.

Last year the gag was an effort to save flops by injecting color into them. The result was the public became wary of films advertised as having color in them.

The color orgy had its start with "The Gold Diggers of Broadway," which is said to have grossed $5,000,000. The picture didn't need color to get over, but the fact that the public flocked to it started a mad rush by producers for color, to which was wrongfully ascribed the picture's success.

Warners Had Monopoly

At the time, Warners had sewed up all the eight cameras of Technicolor, scheduling 40 color pictures for the year. However, Paramount, M-G-M, RKO, Tiffany and Columbia also made a bid for color, so that Technicolor was forced to increase its capacity 800% within a few months, raising its total of cameras to 50. The resultant splurges with color came with such rapidity and color was used so promiscuously that public reaction soon followed.

Producers soon revised their plans and, realizing their mistake in proceeding too swiftly, appealed to Technicolor. Its contracts are non-cancellable and carry a deposit of $25,000, but a temporary cancellation was permitted, Technicolor agreeing that the development was proceeding too fast. The postponement has permitted a number of improvements.

Company officials now are pointing to "Whoopee" as an example of what can be done through intelligent use of color and cite it to back up their belief that new improvements presage a real comeback for color this year.

Meanwhile, Howard Hughes is preparing an expansion for Multicolor, which he expects to use in a number of films next year.

Rushing Work on Multicolor Plant

Hollywood—Multicolor, Inc., is rushing work on its new $500,000 plant in order to be ready for operation by Nov. 15. Multicolor is said to have enough commercial film and short subject orders in color to keep it rushed for over six months.

Technicolor has laid off over 200 men in the past few months and the plant is running with a skeleton crew at present. Producers would rather hold orders for color contracts over until business is better than spend extra for color prints at this time.

Sound Still in The Laboratory, Says Crawford

Sound still is in the laboratory or experimental stage of its development and should be considered as much, and its delivery from the workshop was made entirely too soon, declared Merritt Crawford, sound patents authority, in an address delivered to members of the North Shore Men's Club at Flushing, L. I.

"One of these days when the talking picture's technique had been developed sufficiently to create the illusion of reality attained by the silent film," Crawford stated, "it is destined for a great future. It will indeed then be a new art. But that time is some distance ahead.

"At present, sound and speech in our screen entertainment dominates our ideas, partly by its novelty. It is an obsession, which, I think, will not be permanent," he said. "In my opinion, the talking picture is only an incident in the forward progression of the animated screen art—the art whose ultimate place in civilization's scheme no man today can fully visualize. Eventually, sound or speech will only be an adjunct of the motion picture and not even an absolutely essential part of it," predicted Crawford.

Natural Growth Limited

"It will have its place, just as do the stage settings, the lighting and the costumes, to enhance or add to the entertainment or educational value of the story told by the screen. But that is all. Temporarily, the talking picture has vastly limited the natural growth of the purely cinematic art. The pantomime—the suggestion.

"The talkie has taken from the screen much of its powers of illusion. Let us hope that the sound engineers are soon able to give back to the screen what they have taken away from it."

Edison on the Spot

In tracing the early history of films, Crawford recalled the famous court decision which charged that Thomas Edison was "not the inventor of film," nor was he "the first inventor of apparatus capable of producing suitable negatives." Crawford gave Edison credit, however, for commercializing films, but belittled his discovery and inventive claims.

Socked!

Kansas City—Misrepresenting the earning capacity of a theatre constitutes an offense, according to Judge C. A. Burney of the Circuit court here. In February, 1926, Frank Emery of Lincoln, Neb., purchased the Bufurd, Kansas City suburban house, from J. T. Wilson and I. S. Martin, paying $3,000 cash and giving two notes totaling $3,500. Judge Burney last week invalidated the sale, canceled the notes and gave Emery judgment for the $3,000, on the grounds the sellers misrepresented the earning capacity of the theatre when they told Emery it had averaged $75 a week net.

Discuss Successor

Los Angeles—W. H. Lollier, of Fox West Coast Theatres, has gone east to confer with Harley Clarke, Fox chief, concerning a successor to H. B. Franklin. Oscar Oldknow, who is at present in charge, is here only temporarily, according to reports from the theatre offices.

Lollier, representing the West Coast circuit stockholders, will endeavor to get some one who is not classed as a Wall Street man to take charge, the West Coast Theatre stockholders believing it best not to have an eastern financier at the head of the circuit.

Harry Hartman, division manager for southern California, is reported to be taking over an eastern division under the supervision of Harry Arthur, whose former position Hartman now holds. Hartman said nothing definite had been arranged so far, however.

Franklin Status Has 'Em Guessing; Bet on RKO Post

Hollywood—What about Harold B. Franklin? The coast is guessing plenty, but the yarn that is credited most is the exclusive appearing in Motion Picture News last week that the former president of Fox West Coast Theatres will head RKO's activities on the Pacific Slope. Franklin denies this and confines his remarks to the mere statement that his plans will be made public next week. Insiders, however, lean toward the Radio affiliation.

Harold B. Franklin

Over at Fox West Coast, where Oscar Oldknow is in command, at least one change has been made. Jack Frost, formerly with Publix in the East, will take over duties until now handled by J. J. Franklin, manager of Fox West Coast's Los Angeles division.

J. J. will join his brother. This, of course, was anticipated.

In New York, a number of reports concerning Harold B. Franklin's future are rife. His name is still being linked with the Warner theatre department, the story being that he will step into Spyros Skouras' post when the latter is moved up to a higher executive post. Another yarn has it Franklin will go abroad to handle theatre activities for Paramount. A third identifies him with development of a new chain on the coast, possibly in association with Abe and Mike Gore.

The fourth still ties him in with Howard Hughes.

Twelfth annual ball of the Actors' Equity Association will be held at the Hotel Astor, New York, Nov. 8, states Margaret Smith, general manager.

Censors Say It With Roses and Eats; $300 Gone

Seattle—Seattle's muchly publicized theatre board of censorship, headed by the muchly publicized Dave Himelhoch, manager of Fox's Coliseum here, is in the limelight again!

Now it is a charge by Mrs. Edith Williams, former member of the board but not reappointed by Mayor Frank Edwards for the current year, that the $300 in the city budget of 1929 for the censor board was "misappropriated"—for such things as luncheons and flowers for members.

She and other members repeatedly demanded an accounting, she said, but had none. Whereupon she complained to the mayor and the 1930 budget saw no appropriation for the censors.

"Mrs. Williams has made a grave error, or is, at least, uninformed," Himelhoch said. "The record of funds spent is in perfect shape and open to the public. Certainly we bought meals for board members who held meetings at noon to prevent loss of time from their businesses. And we purchased flowers for members of the board who were ill. But members often were compelled to pay for minor expenses of the board out of their own pockets."

And, in conclusion, Himelhoch hinted, rather broadly, that Mrs. Williams may have been disappointed at lack of reappointment when the board was reduced from nine to five.

Talkers Losing Ground in France, Writer Declares

Talkers are steadily losing ground in France, states John White, United Press correspondent writing from Paris. He quotes as his authority the "Courier Cinematographique," which believes silent pictures, perhaps with sound effects, will become increasingly popular.

Edouard Samuel, writing in the French trade paper, is cited by White as declaring patronage of the combined picture theatres in Paris has fallen off sharply and progressively over a period of three years. Samuel adds that French producers have achieved anything but happy results in the talker field and that most theatre-goers prefer "the comfort of silence."

Philadelphia and St. Louis report sensational jumps, with these two towns enjoying a short wave of prosperity brought about by thousands visiting to see the games.

Rally Round the Flag, Boys, There's A Traitor in Camp Who Needs Shooting

Industrial Units to Continue

Paramount and Pathe will not junk their industrial departments, contrary to current reports which state that both companies found the sledding too tough and decided to pull out. The former is understood to have $1,250,000 in uncompleted contracts for production of industrials now on the books.

Entrance of Warners recently stiffened the competition in a field which turns over heavy grosses if theatre time can be secured for the ad plugs. The picture companies, adverse to tying in their houses on this basis will offer no guarantee for playing time, and, as a result, are finding customers few and far between.

"U" and Bureau Warn Against 'All Quiet' Trick

Columbus—Protests from Universal and the Better Business Bureau of Ohio have been received by the Ohio exhibitor unit over the manner in which some exhibitors are advertising a picture formerly known as "The Battle of Chateau Thierry."

The picture is being billed as "All Quiet along the Battle Front," which the bureau and the Ohio unit agree is misleading advertising and injurious to "All Quiet on the Western Front."

The exhibitor association is asking its members to refrain from being a party to any such "deception and misrepresentation of this nature."

Stench Bombs in Two San Jose Houses; 1 Arrest

San Francisco—A San Francisco man was arrested as labor trouble broke out anew in two San Jose motion picture theatres employing non-union operators.

Jack Setton was accused of exploding two stench bombs in the National and the Hester theatres. Setton confessed, San Jose police said, and further declared that a San Francisco man had hired him for $10 to "bomb" the theatres. San Jose authorities brought him here and were still searching for the instigator of the plot.

Returns to Coast

Hollywood — Herman J. Mankiewicz, scenarist at the Paramount studios, has returned from New York, where he has been working at the company's eastern studio. During his stay in New York Mankiewicz worked on the screen play for "The Royal Family," now being filmed there with Ina Claire, Frederic March, Mary Brian and Henrietta Crossman heading the cast.

Paramount, RKO Rivalry in N. W. Becomes Hectic

Minneapolis—Drift apart of Paramount and Radio on the switching of play dates will result in an aggressive campaign by RKO in this territory this year, it is reported. New first runs in the Twin Cities, Duluth, Rochester and Winona in Minnesota, La Crosse and Eau Claire, in Wisconsin, Fargo, N. D., and Sioux Falls, S. D., are planned by the chain.

In addition, Iowa and Nebraska may be invaded by RKO to get into closed Publix spots, it is stated. Scouts for the company have been here recently considering the situation as regards the Minneapolis territory.

RKO Reported Seeking Libson Cincy Theatre

Cincinnati—Negotiations are under way for acquisition of Keith's by RKO, according to report in circulation here, which is to effect that a deal will be finally completed within two weeks. Keith's, operated by United Theatres Corporation, of which Isaac Libson is the executive head, is the only first-run house here not taken over from the Libson-Heidingsfeld interests in the recent RKO transfer.

Schrecklich!

Hollywood—Probably it is just an old German custom. Any way, Hans Kraly, former assistant to Ernst Lubitsch, took a sock from his erstwhile boss. It was at a dancing party given by Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks. Lubitsch said it was because Kraly and the former Mrs. Lubitsch taunted him, while Kraly said he didn't know what the fracas was all about. However, Lubitsch conceded a technical knockout for his divorced wife, predicting sarcastically a brilliant pugilistic career for her. The wife came to Kraly's aid after her former husband struck the writer. She said the attack was due to jealousy.

Mustering Hollywood Army to Oust Fanatic Who Delights In Knifing Film Folk

Hollywood — This town's famous old grapevine system is working plenty overtime in an attempt to clip the wings of a self-appointed fairy godparent who acts more like a serpent than the mythical guardian.

This gent has a perverted sense of something or other, judging by his venomous and highly denunciatory attacks made against the industry, in public places, whenever the occasion arises. Most of the town has been wised up to turn thumbs down on the fanatic and his few followers who use the soap-box method of knifing people and the workings of production.

On more than one occasion he has attempted to crash the news columns of the daily press, here and elsewhere, but editors recognize in his stuff the work of a poison pen and it usually reaches the furnace via the waste-basket route.

It all started several months ago when, unheralded except for the noise of his own trumpet, he arrived in town with his wife and proceeded to the credentials committee of the Wampas for Annie Oakleys to visit the Movie City's studios. When asked for a legitimate reason why such permits should be issued, the crank promptly responded that he and the missus were representing two well-known weekly magazines who had commissioned them to write an article on the industry from the inside production angle.

A checkup by the Wampas revealed the fact that commissions had never been assigned to the pair, and what was more, neither of the magazines had ever heard of them. Suspicions of the organization which linked the pair to the enemy camp were, therefore, verified and passes were refused.

Not a week had elapsed before the new arrivals began to tear into everything that's sacred to Hollywood—and there are still a few principles which cannot be tampered with. Big names were brought into printed pamphlets which just reeked of libel, and the fight was on. Pictures which were nationally recognized as clean and wholesome successes were then put on the spot, and attempts made to place untruthful and dirty "exposes" in various newspapers and magazines.

In recent days, this pair has gone the limit, spreading their doctrine of untruth to New York and other cities, and launching widespread moves in an attempt to blacken the character of the industry in general.

Hollywood believes the gent is just nuts and has been unable to find either political or church affiliations which might have a "sinister" motive for knifing films and film folk.

Independents in Chicago Embrace As Storm Brews

Chicago—Obviously, there is nothing so effective in bringing drifting brothers together again as a few storm clouds on the horizon.

For the past several months there has been an apparent indifference to the affairs of their organization among members of the Illinois Independent Theatre Owners' Association. Meetings were poorly attended, and payment of dues were falling off. Then came the re-zoning conferences once more, at which Aaron Saperstein, president of the Independent unit, made his lone, and consequently conspicuous stand, against adoption of the proposed plan of release and protection. Assailed and criticized on all sides, Saperstein's board of directors first rallied to his support. Then a meeting of the entire organization was called to consider the vote on the proposed plan. Eighty members, representing 150 theatres, responded. Not only in numbers, but in spirit and determination as well, was the meeting an unprecedented one in the life of the organization.

Responding to the appeals of Abram F. Myers, president of Allied States; Al Steffes of Minneapolis, and directors of the organization, the lax members kicked in with back dues, new members were signed up, and the organization took on a life and purpose which even its officers admitted had not existed before.

The rejuvenated organization is now hitting on all cylinders and its new determination appears destined to win for it all the concessions it is demanding in connection with the new zoning plan. There are indications, even, that it may do infinitely more than that with the aforementioned subject.

Allied Facing Battle in Iowa; Smith in Field

Des Moines—Although all's seemingly quiet along the exhibitor front in this territory, there is a battle looming to decide whether the M. P. T. O. or the new Allied Theatres' Association is to be the dominant factor among independents of this state.

The new Allied unit took over the recent convention of the M. P. T. O., elected its own officers and now is preparing to open a permanent office here. Its militant leaders intend an expansion program.

Meanwhile, E. P. Smith, president of the M. P. T. O., has been busy in the field. Dues of his membership expire Jan. 1, but he has no intention of letting the organization pass out of the picture. It is probable that he will call upon the M. P. T. O. A. for aid in holding members in line, and the new group may offset by appealing to national Allied leaders, so a battle is in prospect.

Ol' Black Al

The newest drama at the box-office might easily be captioned: "Time is fleeting—and so is fame," or "What a whale of a difference just a few years make."

It concerns old man public's fickleness and Al Jolson, who, exactly three years ago, was being touted far and wide as one of the biggest money-makers of the age. On Oct. 6, 1927, when Al opened in New York in "Jazz Singer," he was acclaimed a sensational draw, and later proved the accuracy of this compliment when the latter film and "Singing Fool" rolled up tremendous grosses.

Almost three years later, Al's newest picture wound up a disastrous run at the N. Y. Winter Garden, where, because of a floppy b. o. performance, the film was unable to stand the gaff for more than two weeks. And reports from the sticks, too, bear out the New York occurrence, with but very few exceptions.

"What a whale of a difference," etc., etc.

Ohio Exhibitors Make Mad Dive For "Big House"

Cleveland—With the lifting of the ban on "The Big House," the local M-G-M exchange was swamped with requests for dates to such an extent that the picture has already been booked into every town in the territory of 10,000 and more inhabitants. It will follow "Whoopee" at the Stillman.

"Numbered Men," First National's prison feature picture, was passed by the Ohio Board of Censors at the same time that the ban was lifted on "The Big House." Both pictures had been held up in Columbus since last June because Dr. John L. Clifton, head of the state board of censors, declared they were unwholesome for the youth of the state. Both were passed without any eliminations.

Merry Mixup in Ad Campaigns on Prison Pictures

Lima, O.—Quite an advertising battle was staged by Warners' Ohio here and the State, independently owned, an interesting feature of which pitted a First National picture in the opposition house against a M-G-M entry in the Warner house.

Warners' Ohio billed "The Big House" as the "most talked of picture in the history of talking pictures," while the State countered with a "Don't be confused" line, asserting that "Numbered Men" was the one and only authentic picture taken from the stage play, "Jail Break."

Chi Film Board To Compromise Protection Jams

Chicago—That the Chicago Film Board will compromise on all major points of independent objection to the proposed plan of release and protection for this territory was revealed to Motion Picture News this week. Film Board members and the distributors' committee which authored the plan went into session this week to work out a plan of adjustment and concession.

All restrictions against double-featuring, one of the principal points of independent objection, are certain to go by the boards, it was learned. This means that local exhibitors will be permitted to double feature in the first week of general release, as has been the custom in the past, rather than in the eighth week of general release, as is specified in the new zoning plan. Concessions are also possible on the regulations against give-aways, or bargain admission gags, and the membership line-up on the continuing zoning committee. Independents have objected to the first on the grounds that give-aways were no more objectionable than the cut-rate matinee scales offered by the de luxe houses, and to the second, on the grounds that the proposed membership leaves them unequally represented on the continuing zoning committee.

The Film Board and zoning committee will also classify "C" release houses, which was not done in the original plan, and will list in the plan all downstate key centers. In the plan submitted two weeks ago, which was unanimously rejected by the independents, only so-called "Publix towns" were considered, with downstate cities that are just as important as the Public centers, entirely ignored.

The plan with these adjustments will then be re-submitted.

Allied Changes Tactics, Avoids Omaha Sessions

Omaha—With the stage set for fireworks to repel the anticipated invasion of this territory by Allied States Association, its organizers pulled a surprise when they failed to show up Tuesday and Wednesday as the convention of the western Iowa and Nebraska exhibitor unit got under way.

This indicates that Allied has changed tactics since the St. Louis gathering, when the group "moved in" and won over many of the exhibitors in town for the gathering.

C. C. Pettijohn of the Hays organization and M. A. Lightman, president of the M. P. T. O. A., were billed as star speakers at the Omaha sessions. Pettijohn, however, was absent because of illness.

Chicago Film Board Grants Concessions To Independents in Protection Dispute

Half of Theatres in Country Independent, Is Claim; 'Initialing' Trick?

Chicago—Cautioning member exchanges against arbitrarily putting into effect the proposed plan of release and protection for this territory, which was unanimously rejected by the Illinois Independent Theatre Owners' Association during the week, the Chicago Film Board of Trade gave evidence that wholesale concessions will be made to the objections the independents have raised against the plan. The warning of the Film Board followed closely on the independents' meeting which was addressed by Abram F. Myers, president of Allied States, and Al Steffes of Minneapolis, at which frequent mention was made of test cases to determine the legality of protection in Illinois.

The proposed plan had been given "tentative approval" by all major distributing, circuit and chain organizations in the territory affected, but had been rejected by Aaron Saperstein, president of the local Allied unit, and E. E. Alger, downstate exhibitor. Saperstein's veto was unanimously upheld by the board of directors of his organization, and at the later meeting by 85 members, representing 150 theatres. Several local exchanges had begun to sell in accordance with the provisions of the zoning plan, which was published exclusively in last week's issue of Motion Picture News, when halted by the Film Board's warning.

Legal Battle Looms

"Any attempt to gain aproval of a plan of protection," Al Steffes told the independents, "is merely an attempt to get you to legalize an illegal act." In reply to a question, Steffes advised the independents to "get the best attorney in Chicago if the Film Board attempts to enforce the plan despite your veto. He'll get you out of it."

Officers of the organization urged that the matter be taken to a Federal court "to determine whether protection is legal in the State of Illinois."

Myers, who made the trip from New York by plane in order to address the meeting, spoke with more restraint, but in the same vein. Proceeding on the theory that "where there is no competition there should be no protection," Myers set about to demonstrate that real competition does not exist between Chicago Loop theatres and the small neighborhood houses; nor between the theatres of Chicago and those of outlying towns.

"When autocratic zoning boards arbitrarily seek to administer protection counter to this principle," Myers said, "the injuries they do are certain to bring them to grief whenever an injured one resorts to his civil rights.

"Independents, properly organized, would have the power to demand and obtain equality with producer-affiliated theatres in all things. Between the statement made at the last 5-5-5 conference, to the effect that we could obtain none of our demands because we represented 'only 15 per cent of the theatres,' and the one made to the government later that we represented 65 per cent of the theatres, there is a reliable mean. I would say that independents represent—numerically, at least—50 per cent of the theatres. In that background is the basis of an organization as powerful and efficient as the one opposed to you. And, certainly, there is refutation in it of the independent's national viewpoint of helplessness and hopelessness."

Referring to the manner in which Chicago and downstate representatives at the last zoning conference here were requested to "initial" the backs of their copies of the proposed zoning plan to signify "tentative approval," Myers said: "That was a trick that could not even have been attempted in New York. It shows the need of a strong organization here."

By calling attention to the large and spirited meeting, Myers refuted stories that the local Allied unit was about to break up for lack of interest and non-payment of dues.

Steffes, too, referred to the "initialing" of the proposal as a trick.

"Charlie Pettijohn," he said, "wants a zoning schedule in existence here at any cost by the time the Marks Bros. case gets to court. He wants to be able to wave a protection plan in front of the judge and say, 'What are you talking about? Chicago exhibitors are satisfied. They have approved this.'"

Steffes defended the objections of the Illinois independents to the proposed zoning plan. Those objections are centered on the regulation of double-featuring and the restrictions on give-aways. Steffes' contention was that if double-featuring was to be regulated, so should the stage shows of the de luxe houses be similarly regulated; and if the give-aways were to be restricted, so should the bargain matinees of the larger houses be restricted. At present, many of the latter, even in the Loop, have matinee admission scales lower than the evening admissions of the smaller outlying houses. Some of these scales are in effect up to early evening.

Steffes, too, urged the maintenance of a strong local organization, and support of Allied States, to which, he said, even the non-member independents owe their existence today. He recounted the several victories of Allied during the past eighteen months to substantiate his statement, and added that the "best contract the independent has ever had, due to the efforts of Allied, will soon be in force." A reference of his to the "rotten productions" with which theatre owners have been served during the past year, drew applause.

Saperstein Attacks Plan

Further objections of the independents to the proposed plan were voiced by Aaron Saperstein at the meeting. The first is that theatres in the "C" release classification are not designated in the plan, which placed that classification in the jurisdiction of the continuing zoning committee, to which the independents object on the ground that they are not fairly represented on this committee. A second objection was that, according to Saperstein, only so-called "Publix towns" are considered in the downstate plan, with other towns, just as important as those considered, ignored entirely.

The zoning plan, when put before the meeting, was rejected in its entirety by unanimous vote. Further discussion indicated that the independents may now fight any move whatever to inaugurate a plan of protection in the territory.

In contrast to the three months of zoning meetings held behind closed doors here, the independents' meeting was thrown open to all and sundry—even to trade press representatives, against whose admission to zoning meetings special precautions were taken.

Chicago—Allied States is patterning its organization nationally after that of the Hays organization, it was stated here at a meeting of the local Allied unit. Branch offices, similar to Film Boards of Trade, will be established wherever an Allied unit is in existence, and the local units will henceforth bear the Allied name combined with the state in which they are located.

In accordance with the change, the membership of the Allied unit here voted approval of a change in name from Illinois Independent Theatre Owners' Association to the newly designated form—Allied Theatres of Illinois.

Michigan Unit Takes Brookhart Cue on Rezoning

Grand Rapids—Zoning may become the McCoy insofar as the M. P. T. O. of Michigan is concerned, but something will have to be done about it first.

Senator Brookhart's speech in which he took a crack at protection and zoning, is generally considered by those who attended the annual convention as indicative of how the organization itself may be expected to react to the zoning plan.

A. Eiseman of Flint was elected president for the ensuing year. In office with him are S. C. Schram of Kalamazoo as vice-president; H. T. Hall of Detroit as secretary, and J. E. Niebes, also of Detroit, as treasurer.

The directors are Harry Clark, Fred De Lodder, E. E. Kirchner, Tom Lancaster, J. C. Ritter, A. Robinson, Alex Schreiber, Carl Schweighart, Frank Wetsman, Lou Wisper, all of Detroit and the following:

Ray Branch of Hastings; Glenn Cross of Battle Creek; Allen Johnson of Grand Rapids; Leon Krim of Mt. Clemens; H. T. Reynolds of Grand Rapids and H. A. Wood of Bangor.

Next year's pow-wow will be held at Mt. Clemens.

Competitive Tests Set for Capitol and Roxy by M-G-M and Fox

Wide film, concerning the future of which there is great speculation and trepidation, is to get its first competitive test Oct. 17, when M-G-M pits its new Realife process at the Capitol, New York, against Grandeur at the Roxy.

Grandeur, said to be improved greatly since its first showing a year ago, is to reappear via Fox's "The Big Trail," while Realife is to have its premiere via "Billy, the Kid."

With United Artists, George K. Spoor, RKO and Warners working on wide film processes, the forthcoming test is to prove of widespread interest to the trade, as it is expected to serve as a gauge to public reaction to proposed wide film. If public reception warrants the extra expense of wide film, there is expected to be a scramble to get aboard the bandwagon by the various companies.

Grandeur is 70 mm. film and can be shown only via a Grandeur projector, while Realife is 35 mm. film. An estimated $250,000 has been spent on experiment and actual construction of the Grandeur machines, the cost of which has not been made public, but which is expected to be considerably greater than projectors. Realife can be projected by standard projectors, through addition of special equipment which costs about $100, M-G-M says.

The Spoor process requires all new equipment, while the proposed Warner head is adaptable to both 65 mm. film and standard. Secrecy has shrouded development of the United Artists and RKO processes.

Talk of depression may be widespread, but over at Paramount they are thinking otherwise. The company on Thursday estimated its consolidated net profits, which include earnings of subsidiary companies, after all charges and taxes, for the nine months ending Sept. 27, 1930, to be $13,541,000, which amounts to $4.59 per share on 2,948,397 shares, the average number outstanding during the period. This estimated profit is 39 per cent ahead of $9,731,000, reported for the corresponding period of 1929 and creates a new high record for this period in the history of the company, it is said.

Profits for the three months ending Sept. 27, 1930, are estimated at $5,100,000, or $1.60 per share on 3,180,636 shares outstanding during the quarter.

Big Guns Keeping It Locked in Lab Because Industry Unable To Stand Financial Gaff

Practically official confirmation of the fact that the industry still has a long road to travel before there is wholesale commercialization of wide film came this week when the Society of M. P. Engineers—technical mouthpiece of the industry—made known the officially accepted dimensional standards for equipment and recommended practice, and completely ignored the wide picture factor.

Motion Picture News learns authoritatively that technical and financial leaders are practically chaining wide development to the laboratory for the present, because of the industry's inability to shoulder the terrifically hugh investment necessary to finance the change-over.

One authority told a News reporter that the sound switch would cost all branches between $350,000,000 and $500,000,000, and wholesale commercialization of wide pictures would involve a like amount. Economic status of the industry at present prevents its assuming this new burden for at least two or three years, he stated.

Inability of representatives of large picture interests to get together on a standard width likewise acts as a checkmate, with various factors fighting for 55 mm., 60 mm., 65 mm. and 70 mm. This group has been holding periodical confabs for many months, but as yet has been unable to get together.

The Society, it is understood, has instructed its technician members to withhold any public discussion of wide film until such time as a definite policy, and further development has been made.

Few Dimensional Changes

Not until this week has the Society officially approved standards for apparatus and recommended practice, which were likewise approved by the American Standards Association on Sept. 20. These standards remain practically identical with those

Trouble Gambles With Ron Gamble

Seattle—The last few days have brought nothing but grief to Ron Gamble, managing director of the Arabian, key house of the Farwest Theatres, Inc., suburban chain in this city.

In the first place, Gamble was attacked in his office in the theatre Sunday night, securely tied with a fish line, gagged, and relieved of more than $800 in cash, representing the house's receipts for the week-end just concluded.

Then, to make matters worse, his car was broken into the following night and two reels of "Devil's Holiday" were removed therefrom, causing much consternation among theatre employees, patrons and exchange officials.

Police have apprehended the culprits who made away with the film and have placed them in the city bastile, but so far have been unsuccessful in their search for the two youths who made off with the theatre's cash.

Meanwhile, Gamble is hoping that he may be able to disprove the old adage that ill fortune always appears in three-fold cycles. Two is more than enough, in his estimation.

Knox Reorganizes Erpi Engineering Activities

Engineering activities of Electrical Research Products have been divided by Vice-President H. G. Knox into three departments, commercial engineering, general engineering and reproducing. The reproducing department is being taken over as part of the scope of the present operating department.

The commercial department, headed by H. B. Santee, will have charge of all recording and studio relations save major engineering development, as well as charge of financial relations with producers. For this purpose, B. L. Glaser, assistant treasurer, has been attached to the department. The acoustic consulting service, headed by S. K. Wolf, also is part of this department.

The general engineering department, with G. E. Mather as director, will be devoted to study of recording and reproducing problems, maintaining a staff of consulting engineers. Under the reorganization a group of field engineers, specializing in reproducing, are taken over by the operating department. This department, managed by H. M. Wilcox, supervises the servicing and maintenance of equipment in theatres.

New Standard Release Print to Reduce $6,000,000 Yearly Replacement Cost

Mutilations of Prints and Uniform Projection Are New Features

Aimed to reduce the more than $6,000,000 annual cost of print replacements, a standard release print, which will tend toward more uniform projection and cut down mutilation of film is to make its appearance Nov. 1.

The standard was worked out by a sub-committee under supervision of the producer-technicians' committee of the Academy of M. P. Arts and Sciences. Irving Thalberg is chairman of the committee.

The new standard print was outlined Monday at a luncheon of the Projection Advisory Council, where Lester T. Cowan, head of the technical bureau of the Academy was chairman. The luncheon was arranged by P. J. McGuire of the Projection Advisory Council, which has indorsed the new standard print as has the American Projection Society.

Salient features of the new standard are as follows:

1. Standard nomenclature for different types of prints as well as for the units comprising each reel.
2. Standard inscription for identification.
3. Standard synchronizing marks.
4. Standard method for change-over from reel to reel.

During the next three weeks an advance educational program will be conducted to pave the way for the standard. It is hoped to reach every theatre, exchange, and studio in the country acquainting theatre and exchange managers, projectionists, film editors and laboratory executives with the features of the new standard.

In bringing about a uniform method of change-over, one of the most irksome problems in projection should be solved. At the present time the individual projectionist puts on his own change-over marks. These accumulate and give rise to a constant demand for replacement by exchanges.

The new change-over signals consist of circular opaque marks with transparent outline printed from the negative. Each signal is four frames in length and is placed in the upper right hand corner of the frame. At the first signal, known as the motor cue, the projectionist starts the motor of the incoming machine; at the second signal, known as the change-over cue, the change-over is accomplished.

The time between the two signals is eight seconds or twelve feet of film. This allows the incoming machine to pick up to normal speed and reach the continuation of the picture in time to accomplish the change-over smoothly.

After the projectionist has determined the time of pick-up of his machine he will know how many feet of film his incoming machine requires while the final twelve feet is being run out on the outgoing machine. He identifies this footage with a number on the synchronizing leader and threads up accordingly.

In addition to the change-over system, the standard specifications cover the leaders both at the beginning and end of the picture. At the beginning the leader consists of three parts: protective leader (4 to 6 feet), identification leader (4 feet), containing the part number and picture title.

300 RCA Installations

Two hundred and twenty installations of sound reproducing equipment were made by RCA Photophone in the United States and Canada during August and September, according to a list just released by Sydney E. Ahel, general manager. During the same period eighty-three additional complete equipments were shipped to foreign distributors, making a total of more than 300 contracts for RCA Photophone installation for the two months.

This is followed by a synchronizing leader (14 feet in length) the first section of which (2 feet) is opaque followed by a frame in which the word "start" is printed in black letters on a white background. Footage indicator numbers on the synchronizing begin three feet from the first frame of the picture and are numbered three to eleven.

The ending of the reel will consist of 6 feet of opaque runout trailer, 4 feet of identification trailer, and 4 to 6 feet of protective leader.

Complete text of the Academy's recommendations follows:

In connection with the report of the Academy's sub-committee on correlation of release print makeup and practice, appears a reproduction of the blue print specifications for the makeup of a standard release print, including leader, runout and cues to secure accurate reading and correct change-over. (See pages 32 and 33.)

These specifications have been worked out during the past eight months by this committee, in advisement with technicians appointed by the 17 major Hollywood studios and theatre and exchange representatives. The standard release print applies to sound prints on film, on disc and combination prints. It is designed for adaptability to studio production and dubbing requirements, to laboratory practice, to efficient handling in exchanges and to better enable projectionists to make change-overs without rehearsal or marking and mutilating prints.

Report of the Committee

Revision of the specifications will be made periodically as necessary to further the general purpose of contributing to quality sound picture presentation.

Complete text of the report, as submitted by S. J. Twining, committee chairman, and Lester Cowan, the Academy's technical-bureau manager, follows:

Use of Standard Prints In Sound Projection

The standard release print was designed to make threading up, synchronizing, change-over and handling of prints easier for the projectionist. Take advantage of the new system as you would an improvement on your machine.

Spend a half hour in rehearsing change-over on the first standard print that comes in to your theatre in order to determine the pickup of your machines. As the leaders and cues on all standard prints will be just the same from then on, all change-overs will be just the same.

1. Every standard print you receive from the exchange will have the words printed or stamped on the reel band.

2. Do not mark or mutilate any footage of leader ahead of the action or in the run-out. Remember that the reason the standard is a convenience to you is because it is measured exactly.

3. The protective leader and the protective trailer are never to be less than four feet or more than six feet in length when sent out by the exchange.

4. Any special instructions by the producer of the picture will be found in the two feet of leader immediately following the part title and the two feet immediately following the end-of-part title.

5. How to Find "Actual Change-Over Footage"

Fifteen or twenty minutes rehearsal per machine will be necessary when you receive your first picture made up on the standard release print. Once you know your speed you can change-over between any two standard prints from then on without any additional cues or rehearsal.

The "actual change-over footage" is the length of leader which must be left to run through the incoming machine in order to make a perfect change-over. In other words, it represents the leader that will run through the incoming machine in eight seconds. (Eight seconds is required to complete the change-over as the start motor cue is twelve feet from the end of the outgoing reel.)

The easiest way to determine your "actual change-over footage" is to rehearse by placing the footage frame numbered 11 in the aperture of the incoming machine. Then change-over according to the cues, starting the motor of your incoming machine the instant you first see the start motor cue and throwing the douser switch the instant you see the change-over cue. If there is a lapse between the two reels showing on the screen try it again by placing the footage frame number 10 in the aperture of the incoming machine. Continue this process with the same machine trying footage frame numbers 9, 8, 7 and so on until you have found the foot and the frame in the foot which when threaded up at the aperture will give you the exact change-over. This frame then marks your exact change-over footage for that machine. As all standard prints will be of exactly the same leader footage you will be able to run down to the footage frame number you have found to be necessary for a perfect change-over and this same frame number will always be in your picture aperture when starting the incoming machine. Repeat the timing process for the other machine or machines as there is often appreciable variation between the pick-up speed of two machines in the same projection room.

Markings and Reel Change-over Become Standard

6. Threading for Disc

In threading up for disc, set the needle on the disc at the synchronizing mark and thread the start mark frame into the picture aperture of the projection machine. Then turn down the machine until the proper footage numeral appears in the picture aperture. If the turn down is not made in this manner, changing over from the signals on the outgoing reel will not be successful.

When running down the machine to the proper footage number note the revolutions of the turn table. This will simplify the process of threading.

7. Threading for Movietone

Once you have determined the actual change-over footage which must be left to run through the incoming machine it is simple to thread up each standard leader so that the same footage frame number will be at the aperture ready for the start.

If you wish to test the length of your loops to insure synchronism thread up so that the start frame or any numbered footage frame is the aperture. A diamond mark will show at the sound gate as the diamonds are placed twenty frames ahead of the start frame and footage numerals. You can then turn down to have the exact frame in the aperture for the change-over footage.

8. Change-Over

When you see the motor cue start the incoming machine.

When you see the change-over cue throw the douser switch.

9. The Cues

The motor cue is a circular opaque mark with transparent outline printed in the upper right hand corner of four consecutive frames. The first of these frames is exactly twelve feet from the end of the picture. This distance, like the length of the synchronizing leader, was designed to accommodate the variety of pickup speeds among machines in use.

The change-over cue is a mark like the motor-cue on four consecutive frames, the first of which is one foot from the end of the picture. In placing the change-over cue in this position it was assumed that the average time lapse occurring when an alert operator sees the cue on the screen until he throws the douser switch is half a second. It is essential that the operator throw the switch immediately the cue flashes on the screen if the change-over is to be perfect.

10. Counting Disc Revolutions

When playing discs with standard release prints many projectionists prefer to count the revolutions of the disc to reach the proper turn down for perfect change-over.

11. Change-Over on RCA Machines

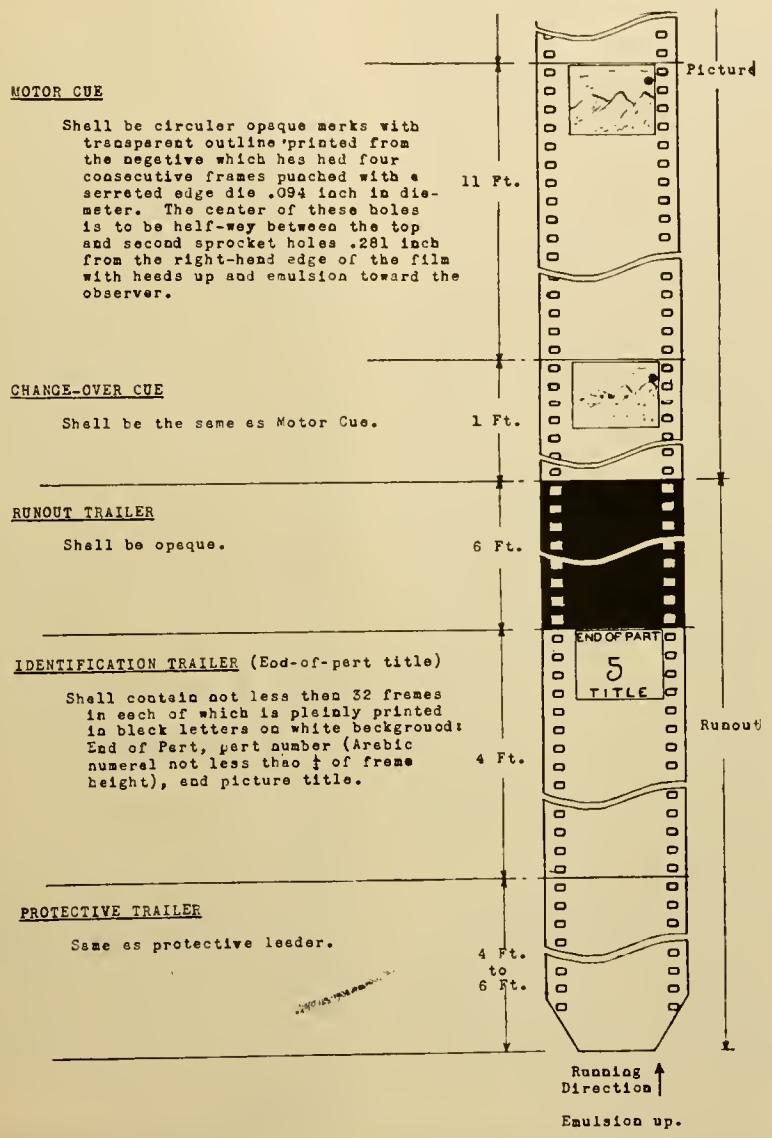
Because of the almost instantaneous pick-up of RCA projectors, reels may be threaded up at the start frame for these machines and the standard signals at the end of the outgoing reel employed for motor start and change-over. In this case practically the same amount of footage will be run through on the incoming reel as on the outgoing reel.

12. Partial Exceptions to Standard Prints

It will naturally be some time before the standard release print comes into universal use throughout the country, as past releases will continue in circulation.



The dubbing process of some producers releasing on disc necessitates the use of more than twelve feet of leader between the start frame and the action. These prints will be standard in other respects and as the footage will be numbered at every foot up to the start frame the projectionist can readily see the length of his leader without measuring.

Handling Standard Prints In the Exchange

1. Exchange Film Inspectors are expected to make sure that every print inspected conforms to the measurement outlined in the Standard Specifications. Any cut outs or mutilations in either the leader or run-out will affect the change-over. It is suggested in this regard that a standard charge be made for any mutilation of leader or run-out and that any theatre returning a print with a reel damaged in this manner be charged for it, and that a complete new leader or run-out be used each time rather than making patches.

Specifications for 35 mm Release Prints

2. The protective leader and the protective trailer attached to the front and end of the leader and run-out respectively are intended to facilitate threading and protect the rest of the print. When either leader has been whipped down to four feet, the length should be restored to six feet by the exchange inspector before sending that reel out again.

3. It is suggested that the nomenclature of the parts of a print be thoroughly understood and used by all exchange employees handling prints.

4. It is important that the exchange stamp or print the words STANDARD PRINT MAKEUP on the band of every reel which fulfills the standard specifications.

Makeup of Reels In the Studio

The standard print will be a distinct convenience to the studio cutter and in the handling of negatives through the dubbing processes.

1. While each reel division involves an individual problem in cutting it is recommended that picture action start and finish on fades wherever possible. Otherwise significant sound should be kept at least five feet from the start and finish of the picture. This extra footage insures steadying down of the projector carrying the incoming reel before significant sound is reproduced and also allows a margin of safety on the change-over.

2. In the case of change-over on a fade, the fade itself is considered as "picture" in the terms of the specifications. The change-over cue will be put 12 feet and the motor cue one foot from the end of the fade. The six feet of opaque run-out trailer is in addition to the fade.

3. The line across both picture area and sound track twenty frames ahead of the start mark frame will serve as the base for all matching of sound track and picture in making up the original negative.

4. The protective leader and the protective trailer of course apply specifically to the release print. However, these lengths of either transparent or raw stock can with advantage be carried through most of the studio operations.

5. The form of the part title is definitely specified. The part title is to occupy at least the first 32 frames of the Identification Leader. It may be extended to the entire four feet if desired. Otherwise the second 32 frames may be left blank or provide space for cueing or other instructions according to individual studio policy.

6. As the Synchronizing Leader is uniform for all prints it is only necessary for the cutting department to specify it to the laboratory. If these leaders are applied by the cutting department to sample prints, care should be exercised to see that the synchronizing leader has been retained in its full length.

7. The visible signal will show as a black dot against light background and as a white circle against dark background. No special cutting is necessary on account of the signal.

Development of Release Print Makeup Standard

Efforts to improve the make-up of release prints and change-over cues were begun in Hollywood more than a year ago. The confusion and complete lack of uniformity among studios was one of the by-products of the abrupt introduction of sound. Until the more urgent production problems could be taken care of many important factors contributing to the presentation of the picture had to wait.

In September of last year the need for correlating practice in the makeup and handling of release prints was recognized and a committee was formed by joint action of the Technicians Branch of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, the local chapters of the American Projection Society, the American Society of Cinematographers and the Society of Motion Picture Engineers. This committee included: Sidney J. Twining, chairman, manager of sound track laboratory, Paramount-Publix West Coast Studios; N. H. Brower, then president of the Los Angeles Film Board of Trade; A. J. Guerin, manager of Plant No. 7, Consolidated Film Industries, Inc.; Sidney Burton, president of the California Chapter, American Projection Society; Gerald F. Rackett, then manager of the Techni-

Heavy Campaign To Educate All Projectionists

Seattle Golfies Too Profane and Noisy; Curfew On

Seattle—Further restrictions on pee wee golf courses and their patrons are scheduled as a result of protests on the part of irate citizens to the public safety committee of the Seattle city council.

James Scavatto, chairman of this committee, announced that he will introduce an ordinance calling for a fine of $300 or 90 days in jail for golfers who make too much noise and disturb the sleep of neighboring homeowners.

The ordinance further calls for the closing of residential district courses between the hours of 11 P.M. and 8 A.M. and in the business district from 12 midnight until 8 A.M. Noisy loud speakers on radios to attract public attention would also be banned.

"Golf is all right in its place," Scavatto said, "but I am seriously considering a move to bar the construction of all miniature courses in residential districts. This game, usually associated with silence as its chief courtesy, is becoming too boisterous and profane as played on the dinky links."

Owners and operators of the miniature links who were present in the council chambers to defend the charges against them were rather dismayed to see the public safety committee composed of Councilmen Robert Harlan and Frank Laube in addition to Scavatto. Harlan is the only golfer of the three!

Synthetic Sport Called Nuisance

Harrisburg, Pa.—A permanent injunction prohibiting the operation of a miniature golf course in a restricted residence district of this city has been granted by the Dauphin County Court. The order enjoins V. Frant Forrer and J. Sharon McDonald from establishing the proposed course at Green and Division Sts. The grounds for the order were that the course would be an "objectional structure" in the eyes of the law and would prove to be a nuisance.

No Golfette Curfew Action in Fort Wayne

Fort Wayne, Ind.—The city attorney here has announced that an ordinance regulating the time of opening and closing miniature golf courses within the city limits probably will not be passed. He declared that he understood the committee on rules, regulations and ordinances, to which the proposed ordinance was referred, would not report the measure back to the council.

"Because the pee wee golf courses which were the cause of complaints made by nearby residents regarding loud speaking and disorderly conduct have been warned and have abided by the warning, the committee probably will disregard the ordinance," he said.

Jokes Going Pee Wee, Too

Cincinnati—In order to get a laugh out of the miniature golf situation, Olsen and Johnson, headlining in a new act at the RKO Albee, use an effective gag.

A plant, gun in hand, is stationed at the side of the stage, remaining silent and motionless throughout the entire act, which runs about an hour. This in itself has the audience guessing. Just before the final curtain he is asked why he is there.

"To keep anyone from starting a miniature golf course on the stage," is the animated reply.

Penna. Regulates Indoor Golfettes

Harrisburg, Pa.—Pennsylvania has placed a ban on the use of any kind of old buildings for indoor golf courses during the approaching winter season.

The industrial board of the state department of labor and industry, which has supervision of the so-called fire and panic law governing the construction of theatres and other places of amusement, has decided that structures used for indoor golf come within its jurisdiction and has promulgated very definite rules regulating buildings used for baby golf. These provide that, while buildings not specifically constructed for golf may be used under certain circumstances, it is insisted that they must be entirely fireproof. In the case of garages used for golf, all must be cut off completely from any place of assembly in the same building, and the walls of the exits from the garage must be of four-inch concrete and the walls of the building proper must be of eight-inch masonry. The garage portion of the building must have external doors of metal, the window frames must be of metal and wire-glass must be used.

Pee Wees Put on Same Basis as Film Houses

Harrisburg, Pa.—Levying of a license fee of $50 annually and a ban on Sunday operation of miniature golf courses here is planned by police. The license fee is the same as charged local theatres, which also are dark on Sundays.

Cummings Promoted

Cleveland—Bob Cummings, with the Paramount Columbus sales force, has been appointed Cleveland city salesman. He succeeds John Himmelein, who last week became branch manager of the local office.

Del Ruth May Go Abroad

Hollywood—Roy del Ruth is considering an offer to direct one picture in London for Brochen Film Co. Del Ruth's Warner contract permits him to make one a year for an outside producer.

Belles Named Booker

Cleveland—Frank Belles has been appointed head booker at the local Tiffany exchange, succeeding Herbert Horstmeier. Belles was formerly with Standard Film Service Company.

Indoor Minnies A New Worry to N. Y. Exhibitors

Albany—Tom Thumb golf courses in Watertown, N. Y., are to be regulated by a city ordinance. Sunday play will be banned and the ordinance also provides for closing courses at a certain hour each night. In Rochester, a license fee of $300 per year will be required from operators of miniature golf courses. Courses opened since June 30 will be charged $150 for the remainder of the year.

In Albany, N. Y., during the past week, plans were announced for the building and operation of five Tom Thumb courses which will be housed indoors, two occupying former motion picture theatres which have been closed for some time, while two will be housed in large buildings formerly occupied by manufacturing concerns.

Announcement of the indoor courses is worrying theatre owners of the city, who had been counting on the outdoor courses ceasing as soon as cold weather arrived. There is no question but that the Tom Thumb courses have cut rather heavily into attendance at theatres during the past summer, yet taking everything into consideration the first-run houses of Albany have had what might be termed a good season.

Putt Promoters Plan Pint Pow

San Francisco—This city is to witness at least one convention which cannot be referred to as "mammoth." In fact, it will be quite diminutive.

All miniature golf experts in the country will be invited to attend, according to Alden E. Glaze, president of the San Francisco Miniature Golf Course Owners' Association.

Glaze and Paul T. Carroll, president of the San Francisco Convention and Tourist League, are planning to have a three-day conclave of the pee wee golfers in one of the smaller rooms of the Palace Hotel at an early date.

All Night Golf Hit By Indianapolis Law

Indianapolis — City councilmen have dealt a blow to all-night miniature golf in this city. They passed an ordinance requiring course operators to pay license fees of $15 a month and close the courses at 1 A. M. The ordinance has been signed by the mayor and goes into effect Oct. 6. It sets a penalty of $100 on course operators who fail to obtain licenses or close at the required hour. The law will apply also to indoor golf courses which will operate this winter.

Another Rochester Suburban

Rochester, N. Y.—Plans for another neighborhood house got under way last week with the creation of the Seymour Amusement Co., with Toby Fogel, Esther Cohen and Lewis Rosenzweig, all of Rochester, as directors.

aid of the public, saying that such a course will lead to outlawry of "the unconscionable practices saddled on the industry by the Hays crowd."

His bill, the senator said, was introduced upon complaint of Iowa independents that block booking and compulsory arbitration was driving them out of business. He declared he has no desire to retard the steadily increasing growth of the industry or to cramp the development of motion picture art. Stating that he accepts the comparison that spokesmen for the industry have made between films and schools in the dissemination of learning, he declared that he has "no desire to retard the steadily-increasing growth of the business or to cramp the development of the motion picture art."

Defends His Stand

"But I would remind my friends in the industry," he continued, "that there is no government worthy of the name that has committed so vital a subject as education solely to private enterprise without retaining some measure of control which would insure that so tremendous a power was not put to unworthy or subversive uses.

"It is not as if this powerful agency for molding the culture, habits and character of the people—more especially the young—had been placed in the hands of specially chosen men of proven competence. With all due respect for their material achievements, the men who head the industry have risen to the top, or have been called in, not for their qualifications as educators or publicists, but for other and wholly different reasons.

"If it be said that the known effects and potentialities of the movies as an educational medium are not sufficient to justify a public interest in what is regarded by some as a purely private business, then there are other grounds. The whole business is founded on a form of property that is not a natural or inherent right, but is in effect a government bounty. It is a fair assumption that the framers of the Constitution and the authors of the copyright law never intended that a copyright should serve as a means for oppressing any part of the people or of depriving the people of the right to regulate in all needful particulars any agency that is so intimately linked with their happiness and welfare as the movies.

"Finally, it may be said that monopoly has always been regarded by the courts as a sufficient justification for the exertion of the police power, and this conception underlies and sustains the extreme degree of regulation to which the public utilities are (or may constitutionally be) subjected. That the motion picture industry, both by reason of the copyright law and the extent to which it has been manipulated with the indulgence of the prosecuting authorities, is a monopoly scarcely admits of doubt.

"The bill that I have introduced into the Senate is not designed to exert that measure of control over the industry that might be justified by the foregoing considerations, because I have felt that if certain monopolistic practices were eliminated, and the public were given a full opportunity to choose the kind of pictures it preferred to see, the desired results could be achieved by normal processes.

"I am aware that in all investigations and proceedings counsel for the Hays office have submitted innumerable statements and charts to prove that the producers frequently break their blocks, but I have yet to see such a statement in such detail as to show whether the privilege of buying in broken blocks is afforded to the independent theatres in the same degree that it is afforded to the theatres operated by the producers themselves. And all protestations to the contrary notwithstanding, it is apparent from information coming to my attention that the producers are not only standing on their blocks at this time, but are tying their short subjects and newsreels to their blocks, thus depriving the theatre owners of virtually all right of selection as to the subsidiary features as well as to the feature pictures.

"Since the theatre is the point of contact between the industry and the public, and the theatre owner is best qualified to judge what the public wants, and bearing in mind that tastes vary in different communities, I believe that block booking as practiced in the industry today denies to the public the right freely to choose the kind of pictures it wants to see and is a public wrong of the first magnitude.

Doubts Commission Power

"The Federal Trade Commission as long ago as 1927 issued a cease and desist order against the practice, but the suit to enforce this order has been allowed to languish in the Circuit Court of Appeals ever since, the record has not even been prepared, and no effort is being made to prosecute the case to a conclusion. Even if the commission should shake off its lethargy and press the case to a hearing, there is no assurance that the Federal Trade Commission Act really justifies the order, and it is apparent that if a remedy is to be provided, for this and for other glaring abuses in the industry, it must be by legislation.

"From information coming to my attention I gather that another practice has recently been carried to a point where it even overshadows those mentioned in the bill. I refer to the practice known as clearance or protection whereby the pictures, after being shown in an affiliated or chain theatre, are withheld from subsequent run houses until they have lost their drawing power. It may well be that it would be unfair for two houses charging different admission prices to play the same picture at the same time in a competitive district. But it is obvious that the practice provides a powerful weapon for the producers in building up their own or favored houses and in weakening their independent rivals. Undoubtedly it has been used to compel the residents of small towns to forsake their neighborhood theatres and drive to the producer-owner theatres in nearby cities in order to see pictures while they retain that interest which is born of novelty.

Assails Zoning Plans

"So great were the abuses in this connection that the government, through the Department of Justice, displayed an interest—albeit a timid one—and the Hays Organization, I am informed, is now engaged in an effort to silence complaint by inducing the exhibitors to agree to protection schedules, thus estopping the exhibitors from further agitating the question and paving the way for the Department of Justice to withdraw its hand. I assume that if this perplexing problem could be settled by open negotiation between the several branches of the industry it would be in the interest of all parties, since the competitive element would serve to protect the public. But the representatives of the Hays office, it appears, consider that they have a job to do and they are now advising independent exhibitors and independent exhibitor organizations that they must take these hand-made schedules, prepared by the sales managers of these supposedly competing producers in New York, whether they like them or not.

"This position, I am informed, has been taken by representatives of the Hays office in Baltimore, Chicago, New Orleans, Atlanta, and Des Moines. This constitutes one of the boldest attempts at coercion ever witnessed in this country, and is a challenge to the government itself.

"It has been suggested to me, and I pass it on to you, gentlemen, that the best method of reaching this situation would be to amend the anti-discrimination provision of the Clayton Act so that it would apply to leases as well as sales in interstate commerce. Discrimination lies at the bottom of most of the monopolistic practices of the industry—discrimination by the producers in favor of their owned and controlled theatres and against the independent houses. Of course, we can not compel exact equality of treatment, and that would be undesirable, but if by legislation we could outlaw excessive protection that has no proper relation to the competitive factors in the situation, and unjust discrimination that can have no other purpose than to injure or destroy the independent theatres by diverting all patronage into the controlled houses, I believe that we would come close to having a solution of this problem."

Hays Office Now Seeks to Silence Exhibs, Charged

Paramount Opens Portland Branch

Portland, Ore.—The new $100,000 exchange building of Paramount has opened. In charge of Frank Clark, the exchange will serve 256 theatres in a territory, including southwestern Washington and extending as far east as Boise, Ida., and south to the California line. Clark recently came here from Los Angeles to succeed William Winship, who has been promoted to take charge of foreign distribution for Paramount.

The new building cost $100,000 and includes a small theatre. The theatre, with Western Electric equipment, cost $20,000.

Reopening of Rochester First Run Slated Oct. 18

Rochester, N. Y.—Final plans to open the Capitol, remodeled from the old Fay's theatre, almost destroyed in a fire last January, were completed by the Comerford interests last week with the appointment of Al Kaufman, manager of the Loew's Great Lakes, Buffalo, as manager, and setting the opening date for Oct. 18. Arch McCallum, former manager, and Robert Barrett, former assistant, operated the house for Edward Fay of Providence.

Carpenters and decorators last week were putting the finishing touches on the place. The gallery has been removed. The house seats 1,200. Warner films will be used chiefly.

Members of the Motion Picture Club, New York, will tender President Al Lichtman a beefsteak dinner on Oct. 16. Purpose: merely a funfest.

The Bath Tub Yodels

Ottawa—Somebody does sing in the bath tub, after all. This was shown when Desire Charlesky, French tenor, came to Ottawa for a command performance before Governor-General and Viscountess Willingdon. A newspaperman found M. Charlesky in the bath tub of the royal suite at the Chateau Laurier Hotel singing to beat the band. And it wasn't "Singing in the Rain."

Publix Launches New Stage Units In Pacific N. W.

Seattle—Something new in Publix stage presentations is being ushered into the Pacific Northwest territory in conjunction with National Prosperity Week, according to Robert Blair, Northwest division manager of the Paramount Publix circuit.

Effective this week, patrons of the local Paramount theatre are seeing stage units including performers from the eastern and middle western shows, backed up by a line of at least 16 girls who will travel with the units from Los Angeles. This schedule will replace the booking of acts for four-week engagements only at Pacific Coast Publix houses, backed by a line that formerly remained at the same theatre indefinitely.

According to Blair's announcement, Publix acts will jump from Milwaukee to Los Angeles, except the lines, which will return East. In Los Angeles the acts will pick up a new line which will travel up the Coast for five weeks intact. When they end their engagements in this city, the acts will proceed to Denver for a week's showing. The line will then leave for Los Angeles to begin the Coast circuit again, while the headliners will proceed on to the Publix southern route, to be joined by a third line group from New Orleans.

Personal appearances of such stars as Jeanette MacDonald, Mitzi Green, Lillian Roth, etc., are scheduled for all Pacific Coast cities.

Musicians of Seattle Yield to Orchestra Defi

Seattle—Withdrawal by the Seattle Musicians' Union of their objection to the importation of a first chair cellist from Chicago this week assured this city another season of concerts by the Seattle Symphony Orchestra. The move came after an ultimatum had been delivered to the union executives by the Symphony board of directors, threatening to cancel the scheduled concerts and disband the orchestra because the union musicians refused to rehearse with "outside" artists while local musicians were unemployed. A loss of about $60,000 in salaries to union musicians of this city would have resulted if the concerts had been cancelled.

Union officials explained that they had no objection to the use of imported musicians, if all local musicians who were competent were used. In the case at hand, however, they agreed to make an exception, when it was learned that the Symphony board would not be dictated to in the matter. The entire action may set a new precedent in this city, as the same policy is maintained by the union in regard to the use of imported players in local theatre orchestras.

As a result of the differences between Conductor Karl Krueger and the Unions, rehearsals for the past week have been called off and it has been found necessary to postpone the opening concert until October 20, instead of October 6, as originally scheduled.

Tacoma Theatres Dynamited in Labor Dispute

Tacoma, Wash.—Police here are seeking vandals who placed two dynamite charges which partially demolished the Community theatre and slightly damaged the Sunset. The front of the Community was blown out and flying debris damaged the interior.

A bundle of dynamite is believed to have been placed in the box office. The projection room and machines also were damaged. J. R. Porter is owner of the house. A stick of dynamite at the Sunset blew a hole in the roof. Both were early morning explosions, so no injuries were reported.

These two suburbans are among the 11 in Seattle, Everett, Bellingham and other cities of this region involved in a dispute with operators. The exhibitors are insisting that only one man be employed in the booth, with the union holding out for two.

Guards are being doubled at all of the houses involved, the managers appealing to the police for protection.

Gayne Whitman in Serial

Hollywood—Due to injuries to Fletcher Norton, Gayne Whitman has replaced him in the cast of "Fingerprints," a 10-episode serial in production at Universal.

Seek Solution

St. Louis—Renewed efforts are being made to break the deadlock in the musicians' strike here, a special committee of the union having been given full power to act in negotiating a settlement. Threat was made this week of a sympathy strike by operators and stagehands unless the musicians' row is settled.

Operators Sue Theatres; Charge Contract Breach

Cincinnati—Frank W. Huss, Jr., and Jennie Carlin, doing business as the Ohio Theatre & Show Co., were made defendants in a $26,000 damage suit brought by Moving Picture Operatives' Protective Union, Local No. 165, who contend that the sale of the Gem and Rex Theatres, operated by the defendants, was made to Dixie Amusement Co., on May 22 last, solely for the purpose of getting rid of a contract which the theatres had with the plaintiff to furnish operators. The Dixie Amusement Co. also is made a party to the suit.

According to the petition, the union alleges that the contract was to continue in effect until September 1, 1931. It charges that the alleged sale of the theatres was a pretense, and result of a combination and conspiracy by the operating company to breach the contract.

Singer Predicts Return Of All-Vaudeville Shows

Seattle—Mort H. Singer, executive of the Radio-Keith-Orpheum circuit, arrived here this week to confer with union theatre employees "ironing out" contract problems and difficulties for the ensuing year.

Tacoma, Spokane and Everett musicians and operators, in addition to the Seattle group, are represented in the meetings now being held.

Singer commented favorably upon the fact that large theatres throughout the nation are retaining their orchestras, and predicted that some day vaudeville will come back into its own, without the feature photoplay as an adjunct.

At the conclusion of his meetings here, Mr. Singer will leave by plane for San Francisco, where meetings with the Northern California union organizations are scheduled.

Strike or No Strike, Warners Reopen Aldine

Philadelphia—The Aldine, closed for 40 weeks, reopened Wednesday with Griffith's "Lincoln," which will play on a road show basis. The house was scheduled to open two weeks ago, just after announcement of the strike among musicians, but since it was then one of the focal points in the argument, the opening was cancelled. Now it appears that, in spite of the threatened general strike, the Stanley-Warner interests are going ahead with the opening, without an orchestra, of course.

One of the protests lodged against the striking musicians by the Stanley-Warner company was that this theatre was forced, under the last contract, to pay $1,111 a week for musicians it did not use. There have never been stage shows or presentations at the Aldine.

Musicians Riot When Ordered on Sympathy Strike

Philadelphia—Desire of the striking picture musicians to enlist the aid of other members of the entertainment world recoiled on them at a "secret" meeting when they were ordered by Joseph Weber, national president of the American Federation of Musicians, to join in a sympathetic strike with the stagehands and amusement helpers who were endeavoring to force hotels, cafes, night clubs, dance halls, and broadcasting stations to employ union help. Weber's letter ordered the strike to begin Oct. 15.

This drastic order, affecting all of the 3,000 members of the Musicians' Protective Association of this city, instead of the little more than 200 picture house musicians, invoked a near riot when John Colaprete, president of the local union, read it to the assembled musicians at their headquarters. As soon as the order was read, there were shouts from all parts of the hall, where had congregated almost 3,000 men, practically the entire membership, and a score of men attempted to speak at once.

Though reminded by one speaker that the stagehands and operators were apparently willing to walk out with the musicians, the film quarrel was not soon patched and that reciprocity was only fair and just, the sentiment of the meeting seemed strongly against the walkout. Several speakers were shouted down and two actual fist-fights were started before the meeting arrived at some semblance of order. A committee was named to confer with Weber in the matter.

K. C.'s 'Non-Union' Union on Scalping Party—And How!

Kansas City—A stench for a stench is the policy adopted by the new projectionists association of non-union operators which was organized to battle alleged gunman tactics of the union operators who are said to have stench-bombed a score or more "scab" houses.

The new association, called Sound Projectionists' Ass'n, sent a letter to union theatres stating that if non-union houses are stench-bombed, the former will retaliate by bombing union houses. The warning is said to have thrown a scare into union ranks.

Fourteen independent theatres are employing projectionist members to the new association and others are expected to join within a week. Opposition to the demands for two men in a booth and excessive wage scales were the reasons for organizing the new association.

management. Accordingly, the reporter followed the trail set down in a trade paper story alleging that Bill Saal, head film buyer for Publix, had been awakened at 2 A. M. by the screams of a hotel maid who had discovered and discharged a tear gas bomb while cleaning the room which had been occupied by Steffes. Saal was reported to have notified the management and summoned a house detective, and was alleged to have said the maid was later attended by a physician.

The News representative first interrogated Burke, the hotel manager, who stated no report of the incident had reached him. Then, in the presence of the reporter, Burke questioned attaches of his office, all of whom disclaimed any knowledge of the incident. With the hotel's authorization, the reporter then questioned members of the house detective staff, the house physician and the chief of room service. None of these, each stated, knew or had heard of the alleged finding of a tear gas bomb in any room of the hotel. The chief of room service then summoned three maids assigned to floor G of the Congress Hotel Annex, where Steffes was quartered during the day. The maid who had cleaned the room occupied by Steffes was singled out.

Sherlock Holmes Stuff

"In cleaning Mr. Steffes' room, did you find anything unusual?" she was asked.

"No, sir."

"Did you make any outcry while working in the room?"

"I did not."

"What, as nearly as you remember, was the condition of the room when you entered it?"

"It was pretty neat, considering. The bed had not been slept in, and the rugs were kind of clean, though there was a lot of cigarette butts and ashes laying around and quite a few bottles and an ice bucket full of water."

"But nothing else?"

"No, sir."

"And what time was this?"

"I would say about 6 o'clock."

(The trade paper account placed the time of the disturbance at 2 A. M.)

"Was it daylight?"

"Yes. It was."

Turning to the reporter, the room service supervisor inquired, "Has Mr. Steffes any enemies?"

The reporter replied that he was not personally acquainted with any.

"Somebody," mused the official, "must have had a bad dream."

cal Bureau; I. James Wilkinson, chief film editor of Paramount-Publix West Coast Studios; and Donald Gledhill of the Academy Technical Bureau, secretary.

The committee attacked the problem and set about drawing up tentative specifications for release print practice which could be made uniform. The cooperation of the Academy and of the Association of Motion Picture Producers was extended to the project. The original group was constituted a sub-committee of the Producers-Technicians Committee of the Academy and representatives of the seventeen major studios were appointed to collaborate with them.

During the subsequent months, various aspects of the problem were carefully studied by the committee, test reels were made, and a series of meetings with the studio, theatre and exchange representatives and conferences with smaller groups were held to insure that the specifications represent an efficient and practical solution.

Terms on Chart Explained

Detailed explanation of terms used by the Academy standards committee in the blue print specifications, which appear on pages 32 and 33 follows:

Sound Print-Film and Disc—A print with a photographic sound record integral with the print and a corresponding disc sound record, either of which may be used.

Paramount Closes N. Y. Studio for Two Weeks

Paramount's New York studio has completed its current group of pictures and, except for a few shorts, there will be little activity at the studio for about two weeks, while plans for the new group of 18 pictures are completed. "The Royal Family" marked windup of the current group.

Meanwhile, Clara Bow and Director Frank Tuttle are en route to New York to make Manhattan scenes for "No Limit."

Rochester Yeggs Get $691

Rochester, N. Y.—Breaking into the Monroe, largest neighborhood film theatre in the city, for the second time since March, burglars chiseled open the safe and took $691 in cash. Their previous loot was $891.

Elmer Lorritz, manager, told police the thieves had broken in two doors to reach his office. He offered the opinion the burglars were the same who pulled the first job.

An unsuccessful attempt was made to burglarize the Liberty, a North Side neighborhood house, the same night.

Buck Sent to Camden

A. G. Buck, for the last year manager of the picture-music department of RCA Photophone, has been appointed manager of the record order and production division with headquarters at Camden. He succeeds J. L. Crewe, Jr., resigned.

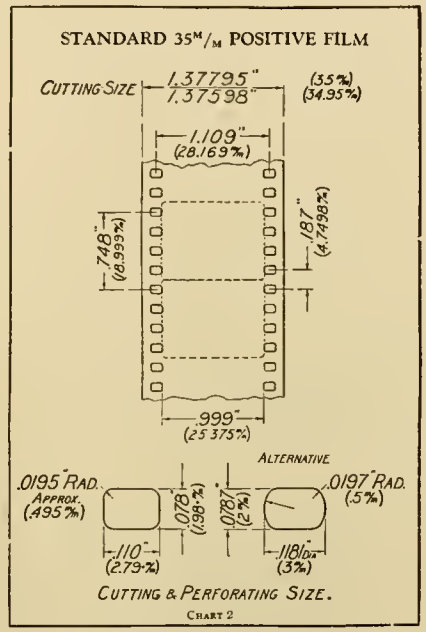
which have been in use, the Society merely giving them approval for the entire industry, and setting up a definite base from which to operate.



Complete text of the standards adopted follow:

Dimensional Standards

5. Motion Picture Projector Sprockets.
   a. Take-up sprocket

Essentials of Old Equipment Practices Remain Unchanged In New Set of Standards

The take-up sprocket, which is a hold-back sprocket on a motion picture projector, should be designed to have the same pitch as the perforations on film which has shrunk to the maximum amount occurring in films of commercially useful condition as supplied by exchanges. This value of shrinkage is taken as 1.5%, and the dimensions of the standardized take-up sprocket are computed accordingly.

The essential dimensions are: Base diameter 0.9321 inch (23.67 mm.). Tooth thickness (at base) 0.050 inch

Other dimensions of the standard take-up sprocket are given in Chart 6.

b. Intermittent and feed sprockets

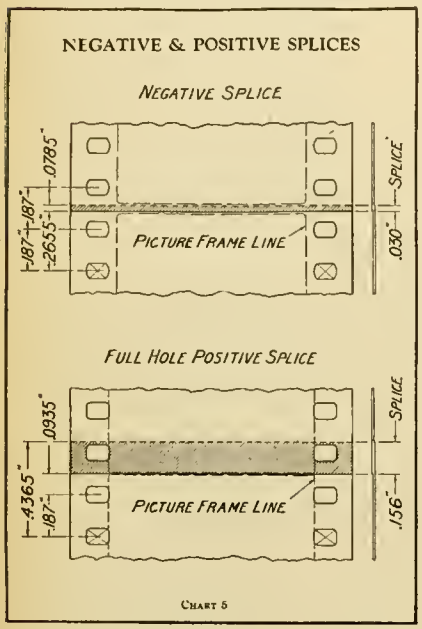
The intermittent and feed sprockets should be designed to have the same pitch as the perforations on newly processed film which is 0.13% less than the pitch of newly cut and perforated film (see Charts 1 and 2).

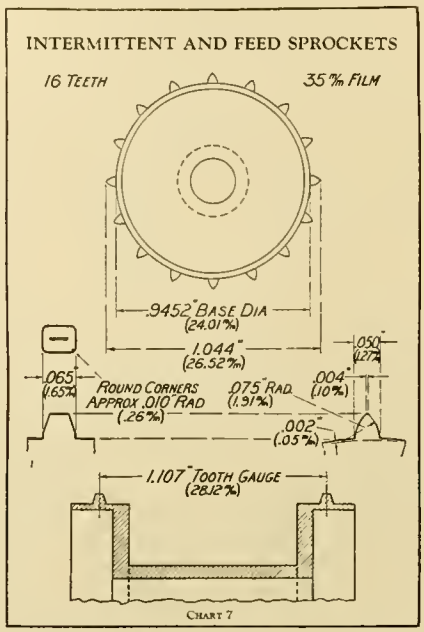
The dimensions of the standard intermittent and feed sprockets are computed to conform to these requirements.



The essential dimensions are: Base diameter 0.9452 inch (24.01 mm.). Tooth thickness (at base) 0.050 inch (1.26 mm.).

Other dimensions of the standard

Engineers' New Dimensional Standards Ready for Industry's Immediate Use



intermittent and feed sprockets are given in Chart 7.

6. Dimensions of Motion Picture Projection Aperture.
   a. Standard 35 mm. film
   Width 0.9060 inch (23.01 mm.).
   Height 0.6795 inch (17.26 mm.).
   b. Safety standard 28 mm. film
   Width 0.748 inch (19.00 mm.).
   Height 0.551 inch (14.00 mm.).

b. No. 2 projection lens
External diameter of lens barrel 2 25-32 inches (70.65 mm.).

8. 16 mm. Feed Sprockets.
   The dimensional standards relating to this element are shown in Chart 8. It should be noted that dimensions are given relating to sprockets having 5, 6, 7 and 8 teeth, and also dimensions relating to these sprockets when designed for 2, 3 and 4 teeth in contact with the film.
9. 16 mm. Take-Up (Hold-Back) Sprockets.
   The dimensions are shown in Chart 9.
10. 16 mm. Combination (Feed and Take-Up) Sprockets.
    The dimensions are shown in Chart 10.

12. 16 mm. Splices.
    The dimensions are shown in Chart 12.
13. Width of Film Track in 16 mm. Cameras and Projectors.
    A clearance of 0.005 inch (0.13 mm.) shall be allowed in the construction of the film track in cameras and projectors using 16 mm. film. The standard cutting width (see Chart 4) is 16.0 mm. (0.62992 inch). This dimension is the upper limit and gives Width of film track = 16.13 mm. (0.63492 inch).
14. Taking Speed, Standard 35 mm. Sound Pictures.
    This shall be 24 pictures per second.
15. Projection Speed, Standard 35 mm. Sound Pictures.
    This shall be 24 pictures per second.
16. Scanning Line.
    a. Position relative to picture aperture
    The scanning line (for combined sound and picture on 35 mm. film) shall be located at an average distance of 14.5 inches measured along

b. Transverse position relative to the guided edge of positive film
The position and dimensions of the scanning line shall be as shown in Chart 13.

17. Sound Track.
    The location and width of the

sound track on combined sound and picture positives shall be as shown in Chart 14.

Adopted Definitions

1. Number of Teeth in Mesh.
The number of teeth in mesh with the film (commonly referred to as "teeth in contact") shall be the number of teeth in the arc of contact of the film with the drum of the sprocket, the pulling face of one tooth being at the origin of the arc, as shown in Chart 15.
2. Safety Film.
The term "Safety Film," as applied to motion picture materials, shall refer to materials which have a burning time greater than ten (10) seconds and which fall in the following classes: (a) support coated with emulsion, (b) any other material on which or in which an image can be produced, (c) the processed products of these materials, and (d) uncoated support which is or can be used for motion picture purposes in conjunction with the aforementioned classes of materials.
The burning time is defined as the time in seconds required for the complete combustion of a sample of the material 36 inches long, the determination of burning time being carried out according to the procedure of the Underwriter's Laboratory. This definition was designed specifically to define Safety Film in terms of the burning rate of the commercial product of any thickness or width used in practice. The test of burning time, therefore, shall be made with a sample of the material in question having a thickness and width at which the particular material is used in practice.

Recommended Practice

1. Aperture Size.
The existing ratio of 3 to 4 between height and width of picture should be retained when introducing any new size of film.
2. Leaders and Trailers.
These should be opaque with markings embossed on them. In a multiple reel story each trailer and the leader immediately following should be marked with the same title.
3. Thumb Mark.
The thumb mark on a lantern slide should be located in the lower left-hand corner next to the reader when the slide is held so that the slide can be read normally against the light.
4. Take-Up Pull.
This should not exceed 15 ounces at the periphery of a 10-inch reel, or 16 ounces on an 11-inch reel.
5. Projection Lens Height.
The standard height from the floor to the center of the projection lens of a motion picture projector should be 48 inches.
6. Projection Angle.
This should not exceed 12 degrees.

7. Standard Observation Port.
This should be 16 inches (40.6) square with its center 5 feet 3 inches (160 cm.) above the floor when the projection angle is zero, the center of the aperture to be lowered 1 inch (25.45 mm.) for each one degree drop in angle of projection.
8. Projector Speed. (For 35 mm. Silents.)
The standard practice should be the projection of 80 feet of standard film per minute with a maximum of 85 feet and a minimum of 75 feet.
9. Camera Cranking Speed. (For 35 mm. Silents.)
A camera taking speed of 60 feet of standard film per minute with a minimum of 55 feet and a maximum of 65 feet should be used when normal action is desired, in connection with the Society of Motion Picture Engineers' recommended practice of 80 feet per minute projection speed.
10. Projector Lens Mounting.
The projector lens should be mounted in such a manner that light from all parts of the aperture shall have an uninterrupted path to the entire surface of the lens.

11. Projection Lens Focal Length.
The focal length of motion picture projection lenses should increase in ¼-inch steps up to 8 inches and in ½-inch steps from 8 to 9 inches.
12. Projection Objectives, Focal Marks.
Projection objectives should have the equivalent focal length marked thereon in inches and quarters and halves of an inch, or in decimals, with a plus (+) or minus (—) tolerance not to exceed 1% of the designated focal length also marked by proper sign following the figure.
13. Leaders for Sound-on-Film Positive.
Manufacturers of sound film should place a leader on each roll of film on which is designated the framing of the picture and the corresponding sound.
14. Projector Apertures for Sound.
"WHEREAS, Investigation has revealed wide variance in theatre projection practices and that there is no effective standard aperture for projection of sound-on-film talking motion pictures;
"Be it resolved: That as a temporary measure this committee recommends that all studios and cinematographers using sound-on-film methods make marks on the camera ground glass equally spaced from the top and bottom in addition to the mat mark for the sound track; these marks to delineate a rectangle 0.620 by 0.835 inch in size and that all vital portions of the picture be composed within these limits;
"Be it also resolved: That the committee further recommends that theatres which make a practice of re-establishing the full screen proportions from sound-on-film pictures do so by the use of an aperture whose size would be 0.600 by 0.800 inch on the basis of projection on the level, the horizontal center of the aperture coinciding with the horizontal center of the S. M. P. E. aperture."

Relief of Wide Picture Problem Through Screen?

Delving deeply into its technical phases for the purpose of discovering some means of mounting temporary obstacles set up by wide film, leading technicians and engineers of the industry will wage a hot discussion on methods of securing a large screen picture at the forthcoming fall confab of the Society of M. P. Engineers.

The semi-annual convention will be launched at the Hotel Pennsylvania, New York, on Oct. 20 with a spirited contest at the polls when two strong factions are expected to clash for control of the organization in 1931.

Wide screens which magnify ordinary 35 mm. film have failed to click to date, chiefly because of technical obstacles and an unnatural touch given to characters which appear out of proportion when flashed on the wide screen. The open floor debate planned by the engineers, it is understood, may furnish material for the correction of these ills. If this occurs, commercialization will be hurried to care for wide film needs, which at present are said to be in a sad plight because of the enormous sums necessary to change over from 35 mm. to a wider measure. A wide screen, such as Magnascope, requires only 35 mm. film, amplifying objects on a large screen.

Color on the List

Color will come in for its share of discussion when G. E. Matthews, of Eastman's research lab, starts an open forum on principles and processes of photography in natural colors. Matthews will be followed by Palmer Miller, of Brewster Color, who will delve into a three-color subtractive.

Practically every important phase of sound is listed for debate, with leaders giving plenty of time to the international aspect.

None in Toronto Over Par; 'Carlo' High at $13,000

Toronto—"Follow Thru," Paramount technicolor, with Buddy Rogers and Nancy Carroll, did not keep up the pace during the week under the new stage-show policy of the Imperial. For one thing, there was no Mitzi Green in person as an added attraction as for the previous week, while some of the regular patrons do not take kindly to Rogers. The result was a gross of $18,000, or a rating of 97%.

"Monte Carlo," at the Tivoli, was strong at $13,000, or 100%. Loew's had a four-day run of vaudeville and pictures, the feature being "Love in the Rough," before going into an all-screen policy on Oct. 3, and this was good for $10,500, or 95% as a farewell. ## Serials Aimed to Bring Back Kids, Derr Says

Hollywood—Pathe serials are being produced with the definite aim of recapturing juvenile interest, states President E. B. Derr, who is in charge of production.

"Children have been more or less overlooked since the advent of the sound picture," Mr. Derr states. "The trend has been toward ultra-sophistication for the adult audiences. This is as it should be, but it seems to me that producers should also provide appropriate entertainment for juveniles. We intend to produce serials particularly for the children and I am convinced that it is a step in the right direction."

New Vaudeville Circuit Routes 20 Coast Houses

Seattle—The Follies theatre, open for the last few months on a combined musical comedy and first-run film policy, this week announced a change in policy whereby it becomes a vaudeville and film house. According to C. M. Dunn of Portland, owner and operator, five acts of vaudeville will be booked in weekly by the Pacific Interstate Vaudeville Circuit of Los Angeles, said to be furnishing this entertainment to 20 theatres in the Pacific Coast territory. # Bankers Bring $28,000 to the "Whoopee" B.O.

Cleveland—This was a great week for the downtown theatres. The annual convention of the American Banking Association, presence of President Hoover and more than 7,000 visiting bankers, and the personal appearances of Eddie Cantor at the Stillman and Cliff Edwards at the State, combined to draw thousands. Downtown theatres were well packed at every performance. In some instances it was the picture that drew heavy attendance. In others, it was the personal appearance of a star. In any event, the results were most satisfactory.

On the other hand, the neighborhood houses were not so happy. The interference of Jewish holidays seriously affected box-office receipts, and even the big pictures failed to register in most cases.

"Whoopee" made the sensational take of $28,000, rating 186%, high for the week.

Three in Boston In Stiff Tilt For Top Honors

Boston—Grosses slid off during the week and receipts were way below the previous week, probably due to two reasons: the Jewish holidays and preparations for the welcome to the American Legion and the American Federation of Labor conventions, both starting Sunday. The early part of the week showed good business, but the last of the week went flat in practically every theatre.

In the slump, the Metropolitan, with "Three Faces East," showed the highest gross with $36,000 and was on equal rating with Loew's State with "Whoopee," both doing 115%. Both films, had they come a week earlier, would have grossed far above that mark. Two houses fell below the average for the first time in many weeks.

Both Keith houses showed 105% for a total for the week with $44,000. Totals for the week from all theatres were just about two-thirds of the grosses for the previous two weeks. Weather was fair and cool.

Okla. City First Runs Topped by 125% of "Satan"

Oklahoma City—Better business and better pictures prevailed in Oklahoma City, and every conceivable method of novel and effective advertising, exploitation and tie-ups was used. Houses are being remodeled and new equipment added, and everything possible is being done to put Oklahoma City on the theatrical map in a big way. Pat McGee, for Publix, and Leto J. Hill, for Warner Bros., are the general managers of the principal theatres and a friendly rivalry is on now, with strong competition looming in the near future.

Miniature golf craze notwithstanding, exhibitors here mopped up with an unusually fine assortment of films. "Madam Satan," at the Criterion, clicked for $10,000, while the "Sea Wolf," at the Midwest, brought in $9,000.

"Hell's Island," at the Liberty, was worth $6,500; "The Bad Man," at the Empress, took in $3,000 for four days; the Capitol showed $7,500 on "Good News," and for four days the Orpheum, with "The Notorious Affair," was worth $3,200.

"Abe," "Africa," Ufa Film Lead Chicago Parade

Chicago—The same trio of small houses which took the Loop profit lead two weeks ago retained their top position for the second week, while the big spots hit average, or only slightly better business during the same period.

"Melody of the Heart" (UFA) continued to hold the city's large German population in thrall for the second week at the Castle. With hold-outs all day long, the picture got $7,490 or 227%. On one occasion there were 150 or more patrons in line on the sidewalk in front of the theatre. "Africa Speaks" (Columbia) gave the Woods $19,500, or 175%, in its second week, only a few hundred dollars under the near-record mark established for the first week. The picture was moved to the State-Lake, largest RKO Loop house, for its third week, while "Lady Surrenders" went into the Woods. ## Tough

Toronto—Nationalism is an adversary that Howard Hughes must strafe if his picture "Hell's Angels," is to be shown in Canada, it is indicated by action of the Ontario censors in banning the picture. The $4,000,000 baby, the censors feel, is a reflection on the royal flying corps, and no aspersions on the king's aviators will be permitted. As the censor boards of other provinces generally follow Ontario's lead, it looks as though it's going to be plenty tough for Hughes in his efforts to get back Canada's quota on the picture. The film was to have had a road show run starting Oct. 6 at the Royal Alexandria here.

"Good News" Tops Des Moines List Grossing $6,000

Des Moines—Taxes—and plenty of them—were due here, and, as a result, theatregoers tightened up the purse strings and did not indulge in amusements. Pictures on the bills were all good.

With Stanley Smith appearing in person with "Good News," the Paramount did lockout business on the evening shows and counted up a record of 150%. The Strand also did unusually good business for the last half of the week. Olsen and Johnson scored a hit in "Oh, Sailor, Behave," and made 125%. # "Angels" Clips $20,000 in First Cincinnati Week

Cincinnati—First-run houses here experienced additional opposition from "Hell's Angels," which opened a roadshow engagement at the Shubert at $2 top, augmented by personal appearance of Jean Harlow, star of the picture, who was in town during the early part of the run. This diverted patronage from the regular houses to extent of about $20,000. Despite this, however, the Capitol, with "Office Wife," came through high among the straight flicker palaces, with a gross of $14,600, for a rating of 113%, which is a gain of $1,600 over the previous week.

The Albee, vaudefilm, had one of the best weeks in a long time, the gross being skyrocketed to $30,900, a rating of 143%, which is practically $3,000 more than the intake for the preceding seven days. This was partially due to the picture, "Last of the Duanes," but more probably to the vaude headliners, Olsen and Johnson, Warner stars, breaking in a new act of pretentious proportions, which seemed to have clicked unusually well with the flesh-and-blood regulars.

The Strand, with "Grumpy," chalked up a gross of $5,190, rating 146%, which was a few dollars under the week before, while the Lyric went slightly below par with "Old English," which grossed $11,750, for a 98% rating. This also was the case with the Palace, showing "The Spoilers," where the gross registered $13,290, equivalent to 95%. Weather was ideally cool throughout the week.

Hollywood — One of the major studios is making a special depicting the life of the early West. Press stories released in advance of the filming announced that a whole tribe of Indians would be brought direct to Hollywood from a reservation.

One of the exploitation men who contacts with the theatres went out on the lot the other day where all the Indians were working and began inquiring about the chances for them making a personal appearance tour at the time of the picture's release. His inquiry disclosed that none of the Indians used in the picture belonged to the much publicized tribe and that none of them was from a reservation. They were the same Indians that have been used in Hollywood for all other pictures where the red man is needed.

The RKO Albee, with $10,800 for "Lady Surrenders," was average, while the Majestic was O. K. at $12,000, showing "Girl of the Golden West." ### Breaks Into Jail

Michael (Six-Syllable) Simmons, big gun of Sono Art's advertising and publicity department, pulled a nifty when he crashed New York's alimony jail for a private showing of "Reno." . . . What a lot of crust showing a divorce picture to a gang in jail for not paying up on alimony. . . . He certainly picked the toughest audience he could find. . . . And they actually applauded. . . . And the reviewers certainly took chances on attending. . . . Jack Harrower had a guilty look as he sneaked in. . . . Mike lost his hat by sitting in the section reserved for the inmates. . . . Gerry Rudolph of RCA Photophone got a big hand for supplying the equipment. . . . What a tribute to the portable machine, that it could be set up on the spot and produce such fine sound.

Remainder of the theatres did about average, although the Pantages dropped down to 85% on "Way of All Men," taking $8,500.

"English" and "Sailor Behave" Flop at Balto

Baltimore—The week was ideal for theatre-going with cool, clear weather prevailing during the entire six days. Rolling up of high grosses was hindered somewhat, however, by the Jewish holidays and the World Series, with many listening to the games at newspaper offices and over radios.

Loew's Stanley and Century, as usual, came away with high grosses for the week. At the Stanley, DeMille's "Madam Satan" went over fairly well with an estimated gross of $14,000, which represents 80%. Audiences appeared to enjoy it thoroughly. At the Century, Gloria Swanson struck a popular note with her "What a Widow," the gross being $16,650, rating 90%.

Next in line was "Lilliom," at the New. While this picture was not considered strong enough to hold a second week, it grossed $9,500, or 95%. Charles Farrell was considered generally not tough enough in character for the play and some people are reported to have objected to the representations of things celestial.

Helen Twelvetrees and Phillips Holmes struck public fancy with their parts in the melodramatic "Her Man," and excellent business was done throughout the week at the Rivoli. The gross was $9,200, rating 115%.

"Old English," with George Arliss, fell considerably during its second week at the Auditorium. The gross was $2,640, rating only 40%. This flop is attributed to the high top price of $1 and the high-class appeal of the picture. Warners' "Oh, Sailor, Behave" also rated 40%.

Billy chewed the end of his butt, looked up at the p. w. and came back with:

"Say, lady, does your husband know you speak to strange men?"

"Holiday' Knocks 'Spoilers' from Perch with 120%

Seattle—Local film houses dropped a bit during the past seven days, as far as grosses are concerned, from the better-than-average totals of recent weeks. For the week, three of the city's key houses waged a neck-and-neck race for first honors, with money honors going to the Paramount on "The Spoilers," but rating honors going to the Fox with "Holiday." The former house got about $13,000 for a rating of 108%, while "Holiday" rated about 120% with a gross of $12,500. The Fox Fifth Avenue took $12,900 with "Dough Boys" for a rating below 100%.

Frisco High to "Good News" on $18,000 Intake

San Francisco—A few high-grade pictures on the several screens in and around San Francisco brought the ratings, both gross and percentage, higher than usual. And they would have been still higher had it not been for Jewish holidays.

Golden Gate did a good business with "Wild Company," grossing $13,500 and a 125% rating. At the Fox, grossing $40,000 and a 110% rating, "Love in the Rough" was the draw. "The Spoilers," at the St. Francis, did 100% and a gross of $9,500.

"Office Wife" A Knockout in N. Y. on $41,000

Catchy title of Warners' "Office Wife" drew sensational business to the New York Winter Garden, where the film attracted $41,000 to the chain's b.o. window, by far the biggest, proportionately, intake of the week.

The seven-day theatre period on this town's main stem was marked—and marred—by an unusually even number of "red" and "black" performances. "Hell's Angels" speedily gains box-office momentum as it winds its way along the dual run at the Criterion and Gaiety.

Los Angeles—Despite its 150% rating, local film row was disappointed in the "Big Trail" opening which turned in $24,000, one of the lowest premiere-week intakes at the Chinese in many months. Even the $5 initial performance failed to bolster up the take to expected gross.

"Scarlet Pages" Plenty Black on $16,000 Intake

Philadelphia—Continued cool weather and the appearance of several popular pictures, one "Scarlet Pages" being heavily exploited, maintained grosses at a good level. The musicians, on strike, are in the midst of another feverish battle involving the whole group, having received orders from Joseph Weber, president of the federation, to walk out on all night clubs, broadcasting stations and dance halls, to enforce the complete unionization of the territory.

"Animal Crackers" reaped $19,000 for its first full week at Keith's, being retained for a second week, with the possibility of a third, though Paramount is behind in bookings here and may want to swing in "Manslaughter" as soon as possible.

In spite of some adverse lobby comment on the part of the customers who didn't like Gloria Swanson in farce, "What a Widow," crashed through to $45,000 at the Mastbaum. "Scarlet Pages" took in $16,000 for its first week at the Stanton, indicating a five or six-week run. The Boyd slumped to $14,000 for the second week of "Girl of the Golden West," and the Fox scraped under average with "Anybody's War," taking $26,000.

Studio at RCA Office

A sound studio has been installed by RCA Photophone on the eleventh floor of the corporation's home office in New York. Now in operation under the supervision of Grover C. Shafer of the department of recording operations, the studio is given over to the making of tests, synchronization and other recording activities.

New 2,100-Seater for Ohio

Bellefontaine, O.—A new two-story, 2,100-seat theatre, to be known as the Holland, will be erected here, the contract already having been awarded. Estimated cost is placed at $175,000.

Flattery

Hollywood—According to the Los Angeles Herald, William Le Baron of RKO got a laugh when he spoke over the microphone at the premiere of "The Big Trail."

"I know this will be a good picture," said Bill, "because we are making one like it."

"Monte Carlo" Takes $22,000 In Minneapolis

Minneapolis—Football fever held Minneapolis in its grip during the week and did comparative damage around the box offices. Postponed high school games on Monday cut into matinee business to some extent, but brought out some celebrators at night. The regularly scheduled high school games of the week took another crack at the theatre queues on Friday, but were thrown for something of a loss. On Saturday the first important game of the University of Minnesota drew some of the afternoon business, but the worst blow fell when the invading team from Vanderbilt University overwhelmed the Gophers and plunged the younger element of the town into impenetrable gloom from which it did not emerge until the evening theatre business had suffered somewhat.

Publix theatres took advantage of the week, however, to introduce a new feature in its tie-up with football by opening its great Minnesota theatre after the Thursday show to dancing for the football fans. The theatre provided 10 pieces of its large pit orchestra with Lou Breese, its master of ceremonies, as director, and the occasion was an instant success. The event is intended to catch both high school and university pre-game celebrators and bids fair to be one of the outstanding weekly occasions during the football season.

The Publix revue on the stage during the week, moreover, took its cue from the prevailing interest and was called "Campus Daze," with Eddie Lambert and Dorothea Berke backing up Breese and his orchestra. Incidentally, the Minnesota is making much of Breese, forming Breese clubs among the newsboys and working other excellent publicity stunts to capitalize the popularity of the master of ceremonies.

Estimated takings:

"MONTE CARLO" (Paramount)

MINNESOTA—(4,025), 30c-40c-60c, 7 days, 7 shows daily. Other attractions: Lou Breese and his serenaders, "Campus Daze," with Eddie Lamhert and Dorothea Berke, collegiate overture presentation, newsreel. Gross: $22,000. Rating: 60%.

"DAWN PATROL" (First National)

CENTURY—(1,640), 25c-35c-60c, 7 days, 6 shows daily, second week. Other attractions: "Meet the Boy Friend," "Red, Green and Yellow," Paramount news. Gross: $8,500. Rating: 85%.

"Air Police," by Arthur Hoerl; "Hell Bent for Frisco," by Gene Pritchard; "First Aid," by Michael L. Simmons; "Hell Skipper," by H. G. Wilson; "Casey Jones Jr.," by Gregory T. Kelsey; "Is There Justice?" by Francis Packard; "Cheyenne Kid," by Arthur Hoerl; "Neck and Neck," by Thornton Churchill; "Swanee River," by Roger W. Sherwood; "Mounted Fury," by G. Evarts Spence. The four designed as specials in the above group are: "Air Police," "First Aid," "Casey Jones Jr." and "Is There Justice."

Of the second group, "Air Police" and "Hell Bent for Frisco" have reached the continuity stage, with casting to begin in two or three weeks. George W. Weeks will supervise production.

Dirty Crack

Hollywood—It was at Malibu, where Coast notables watch the Pacific waves go wild.

"Let's give an amateur show for a gag," somebody said to the marquee lights assembled.

"Yeah," replied a wit in the corner, "You'll have plenty of talent to draw on."

Lots of College Atmosphere on Theatre Golfie

Ann Arbor, Mich.—The Michigan here is operating a complete indoor golf course for the free use of patrons.

A course of 15 holes, each one of which is original in design with the Michigan management, has been built by house mechanics and electricians in the basement of the 2,200-seat house. Clubs and balls are furnished by a local sport shop and patrons who have paid their admission at the box-office may either go directly into the theatre and see the show, playing golf later, or they may play as long as they desire before going into the auditorium. Whichever they do, they get one thing free, Gerald Hoag, manager, points out.

The indoor course is proving popular with the student patrons from University of Michigan and so far seems to be an answer to the serious competition being offered by the outdoor courses in the city. Several indoor courses are being built in the vicinity, all having the usual green fees.

The Michigan course has been designed with a university theme, particularly as relating to athletics. Hazards include shooting through baseball masks, football helmets and tennis nets. To make the seventh hole it is necessary to hit the top of a beer keg just right. If successful, the shot drops through to a spigot and out into a beer mug. The last hole can be made only if the player rings the bell on a suspended model of a Phi Beta Kappa key.

Two long corridors and two large rooms are used for the course, which was set down on the cement floor by means of drills and toggle bolts.

Hayes Denounces Rumors

Will H. Hays this week denounced as "utterly without foundation" reports from abroad that the recent rioting over the presentation of German talkers in Prague were instigated by importers there of American films.

"Such accusations are absolutely baseless," he said. "I believe every factor in the German motion picture industry will join us in resenting such absurd reports, which can only spring from a desire to affect the very cordial relations that now exist between the American and German film industries."

Denny Opposite Pickford

Hollywood—Reginald Denny is to play opposite Mary Pickford in "Kiki."

They say Quaint

THE "It" girl, Clara Bow, takes a whirl at a game of blackjack at Calneva, Nevada, and finds out how much she doesn't know about gambling. She "thinks" that she is playing with 50-cent chips and they turn out to be $100 ones. She gives the manager of the gambling resort checks bearing only her signature. "You fill them out!" she says.

And whew! When the checks arrive at Clara's bank they call for $13,900. And, of course, Clara doesn't want to pay.

It's costly experience if, eventually, she must part with that much money.

With her at Calneva were Clara's secretary, Miss Devoe, Rex Bell and Will Rogers.

Around Rogers, Clara and Bell is a lot of public illusion. They worked hard to create it. The public needs its illusions. That is the service actors and actresses do for the world—create illusions for humdrum lives. They ought to cherish the fictional characters they build in the public mind.

And the public doesn't like to picture its idols around gambling tables. Actors and actresses lose something intangible when such stories become public property, even though they "break the bank," as one of the Dolly Sisters has done frequently at Monte Carlo.

Once they get an actor mixed up with a certain set of people in the movies, he is there for life. And so we have William Powell, than whom there is no better motion picture actor, in another story about "the law." After doing the Philo Vance series and that excellent film, "Street of Chance," we thought Paramount might let Bill associate with some honest people for a change, but "Shadow of the Law" finds him back among convicts and policemen.—*Life.

Gloria Swanson and her Marquis are about to go to court after being married six years. It seems that Miss Swanson has been violating one of the rules of Hollywood, paying too much attention to pictures and not enough to divorce.—N. Y. Post.

Among other photoplay anecdotes is the one that involves Arthur Caesar, formerly of the Hardened Artery, but now Hollywood's best professional insulter. An independent movie producer was worried about his first film, so he summoned Caesar for counsel. In the projection room, after the chin-ema had been run, he said: Nu? Wot have you got to suggest?"

"You have a fortune in that movie," said Arthur without revealing any emotion.

"How do you mean?" asked the man.

"Cut it up," was the devastating retort, "and sell it for mandolin picks."—N. Y. Mirror.

Joke

Cincinnati.—The Motion Picture News news hound, desiring to get both sides of the picture, was recently interviewing the operator of a pee wee golf course. Among other pertinent questions he asked, "How's business?"

"Great," came the quick response from aforesaid purveyor of diminutive amusements. "You see miniature golf is really a necessity. People simply must have their bread and nutter."

All Greek to Them

Tarpon Springs, Fla.—N. V. Darley, who has operated the Royal theatre here for the past two years, handed over the keys and all the equipment to the landlord this week in return for a release of his lease, and walked out. The population of Tarpon is about evenly divided between Americans and Greeks, the latter controling the big sponge industry here, and while the Americans demand the talking pictures, the Greeks prefer the silent, so the business is not sufficient to keep the house out of the red.

A RECENT visitor to Hollywood severely states that the natives have but two topics of conversation—the movies and bootleggers. Clive Brook remarks defensively that he has heard Hollywood gatherings discuss other subjects, among them dandruff! But there is one topic of unfailing interest and charm, suitable to any place, any company, both sexes, ever fresh, ever thrilling—and that is "diet." There is probably no place in the world where so many diet experiments are tried. In Hollywood, if you take care of the pounds, the pence will take care of themselves. The camera has a way of exaggerating size without mercy. One potato, recklessly indulged in, may cost a contract. "If I eat a chocolate cream, it shows in my next picture," moaned a film flapper recently. Almost all studios include a "weight clause" in their contracts. If the player passes the prescribed poundage, the contract is void.—Motion Picture.

The producer must not only construct the big thing but he must let the exhibitor, large and small, have it on terms and conditions that will give the latter a living chance to survive. It is only through this answer to the vital need of the hour, will the motion picture industry continue to progress and prosper.—M. P. Record, Seattle.

THERE is one man in Hollywood who dares to be himself. And is.

He leads his own life, in the way he likes to lead it, and lets the rest of the world go bye-bye.

He doesn't care what people say, or think, or do, or do not do.

He never does anything because it is "being done."

He is himself in his personal—very personal—life, and he is himself in the studio and on the screen.

He doesn't give a rap for publicity of any kind, and has to be bound and gagged before he'll give an hour to it now and then. He's completely un-self-conscious about it all. He doesn't give his life or his habits of living any label or handle, and he doesn't thank anyone else for doing it for him.—M. P. Classic.

THEY'RE running true to their records, these two beautiful sisters whose faces grace the most important flickers. Their own domestic unions were of short duration and they have no qualms as to just whose home they invade with their charming ways. They have no scruples about their conquests, and one of them is rapidly getting a Hollywood reputation for being none too discriminating as to where she scatters her affections.

However, one would think that even these two could be depended upon to keep hands off the husbands of their best friends. Not them! One of them is being talked about all over the film colony because of the frequency with which she is seen in the company of her dearest girl friend's husband. The two women knew each other and were so chummy long before either of them never went to Hollywood, but that's in the past now and there is open warfare.

The sister of the intruder pulled another similar stunt last season. She had plenty of admirers, but she had to choose the man who was engaged to one of the girls in her little circle. The victim in this instance was in plenty of trouble at the time and needed all the help which a big, powerful prospective husband is supposed to extend on such an occasion. But he, too, became enamored of the enticing little thing and left his own girl friend. Subsequently he got the air from her, but too late to do anything about his own blasted romance. Count that cinema season lost when these sisters don't pull something on their camera friends.—N. Y. Graphic.

A well known writer has devised a means of beating the high cost of motion picture living. For a year he has been living in a house in Beverly Hills that rents for four hundred dollars a month without paying a cent for it. He has an invalid staying with him, and he claims that the owner can't evict him while there's a sick person in the family. So that's that. Other Hollywood film writers are planning to adopt invalids, it's rumored.—*Talking Screen.

Those inscrutable ways of Providence! Haven't we all been bewailing the pernicious influence of Broadway on the youthful and inexperienced talkie? Haven't we been deploring the latter's readiness to ape the ways and habits of the stage, while suppressing the promptings of its own cinematic nature? Today we have to admit that Broadway's influence has not been all for the bad. With the milk of Broadway dialogue Hollywood has been obliged to imbibe some of its intelligence as well. No doubt, in the perspective of even a few years Broadway successes are apt to lose a great deal of their glamour. But in one respect they are undeniably superior to Hollywood creations: they represent adult standards of intelligence if not always of artistic appreciation. Injection of intelligence into pictures by means of dialogue may not be an unmixed blessing from the point of view of future developments, but the future will take care of itself. For the present it is a relief to encounter pictures which are not made expressly for the juvenile mind.—The Nation.

that — Quips Lifted and Sifted

NICE leedle yarn about one of the big Broadway boys who came out to write dialog on the XYZ lot. His script was O.K.—swell, in fact—and the picture was shooting when the big execs took a look at the rushes and decided that one scene was all wrong. Hurry call to the dialog writer to do his stuff that night. All work suspended until he should bring in his script in the morning. The middle of the next afternoon the high priced dialog writer crawled back on the lot, weary and red eyed—but not from burning the midnight oil. He'd been burning up something quite different, and he didn't have a line of dialog to show for it. Execs surrounded him anxiously. "Where iss the new version? Let's see it, queek!" The big writer looked at them sadly. Tears came to his eyes. "Men," he said magnificently, "I haven't got it. It wasn't good enough! So I tore it up." Did they believe him? Sure. Wasn't he a genius? Weren't they paying the fellow a number of grand a week? Sure they believed him. Nice leedle yarn, eh? And if you don't believe it, it merely proves that you simply don't know your Hollywood.—Talking Screen.

If the motion picture industry and the amusement business in general is in need of any one thing, it is a tolerant and boosting attitude of the press. If criticism is not constructive, it should be withheld. The best brains possible are being employed in the industries, whose success is the result of courageous trial and error, the "do and dare," which has brought unquestioned prosperity despite knocking, ridiculing and sarcasm. It is noteworthy that not a single one of these horned and barbed vitriol throwers has elevated himself correspondingly.—*Inside Facts, Los Angeles.

Strange things transpire under the Hollywood sun but none are stranger than the determination of the folks who make the movies to be different at all costs. The insistent struggle for distinction is as unending—and quite as important—as the fight to the top. The crest of individuality is the peg over which publicity, public attention and other what-nots, so dear to the heart of the actor, is draped. Thus, Clara Bow dyes her hair flamingo; Alice White goes sockless; Joan Crowford carries dolls; Ruth Roland wears tiaras; Charlie Farrell owns a Ford.—Screenland.

Many and devious are the ways in which the American film producers are tackling what probably is the most difficult problem of the moment—the second conquest of the foreign market. In several of the larger studios considerable activity is to be observed in the special departments created for the emergency. Others are trailing along, watching closely, waiting to see what happens before following the leader. And things should be happening very soon.—*Baltimore Times.

Force of Habit

Hollywood—A bunch dow nat Malibu was digging into one of the Sunday night snacks that the habitues of the beach colony throw for their guests.

Included was a young juvenile who is about to get his first real break via a big picture shortly to make its debut. He was eating, drinking or sipping his soup standing.

"Why not sit down," someone inquired.

"I've been walking around so long looking for a job that I don't know how," was the snappy rejoinder.

THE Paramount Department of Nomenclature lets it be known that Charles Ruggles, who has been agreeably inoffensive until now, will henceforth be known as "Charlie" Ruggles. The change, announces the studio lord chamberlain, was effected "virtually by popular request," Mr. Ruggles acceding graciously to public importuning.

Well. Let's go a little farther along this route and see what else can be done in changing or expanding the labels of some of the better-known players. "Georgie Porgie" Bancroft sounds feasible. Louis ("Cuddles") Wolheim and "Davie" Torrance have possibilities. "Ray" Novarro, "Bennie" Lyon, "Maisie" Pickford, "Jackie-Boy" Oakie, "Teddie" Lowe, and "Bazzie" Rathbone are some of the names which may leap out at you from the billboards unless, as a member of the somewhat vaguely defined public which governs such matters, you register a protest with the chaplain of your nearest cinema house.—Cenema, New York.

"More often than not the picture advertised as risque in the lobby is found to be wholly innocuous, and, it may be added, to the disappointment of a large part of the audience. Obviously, the lay censors of our films go no farther into the subject than the theatre lobby.

"Irreconcilable enemies of censorship are in accord with this new policy of honest advertising. They criticize the movie industry for permitting such a short-sighted policy to survive so long, for they must have known that through it they were playing into the hands of the censorship crowd. . . ."—*Asbury Park, N. If all independent theatre operators were properly organized, there would be no need for the present controversy over the true position of the independent vs. the producer-chain operator.—Greater Amusements, Minneapolis.

THERE is every reason to believe that within a year movies will not be of the same monotonous form and character. At the present time the large companies have succeeded in producing their movies with rigid constructions. The actual form, the technique of the film, has no more variation from day to day than a Ford chassis. Occasionally some daring producer will tack on a cigar lighter, a new coat of paint, or an extra tire, but the form of the movie has, with a few rare exceptions, remained static ever since Hollywood began its great era of sound. Strangely enough even the public seems to have felt the monotony despite the theory that nothing is too terrible for a movie fan. Whatever the reason, the great corporations have discovered suddenly that the gold is not cascading into the cashier's drawer as it once did.

(An unnamed New York bank) has issued a report on the infant industry, characterizing it as a mushroom growth, unsound and risky. All of which is no news to the producers. But it may bring home to the gentlemen once again that, despite the opinion of the Supreme Court, in which the august jurists held the movies were "concerned with industry—not with art, news or opinion," even the most loyal movie fan needs some meat along with his cheap pastry.—Judge.

Pathe—Ann Harding, Helen Twelvetrees and Constance Bennett. Fox—Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell and Fifi d'Orsay. Universal—John Boles. # Before the "Mike" In N. Y. Studios

MONROE SHAFF, assistant production manager to Sam Sax, pinch-hitter for Stuart Stewart, casting director and holder of many other exalted titles and aliases, has branched out as an author, and in collaboration with Stanley Rauh, staff writer at the Warner Brooklyn studio, has written a variety entitled "The Big Shot." Roy Mack directed.

As we strolled onto the main stage t'other day where bigger and better Vitaphone shorts are made, the hisses and boos which we heard reminded us of the time we walked a batter with the bases full, forcing in the winning run. But it turned out that the boys were not in the throes on my behalf but had been told to do so for sound effects during shooting on "Revenge Is Sweet," a Vitaphone burlesque on the showboat mellerdrama of the good old days when a paddle wheel did not necessarily mean a raffle game at the county fair. Burnet Hershey wrote this one, which includes in the cast Barbora Weeks, King Calder, Leslie Adams and about sixty others. Alf Goulding directed.

Sees Extended Run As Prosperity Sign

Growth of extended run policies in cities large and small throughout the nation demonstrates the strides being made toward return of prosperity, in the opinion of C. J. Scollard, executive vice-president of Pathe. He believes that "prosperity is here" and cites a recent national survey he made to prove it.

C. J. Scollard

Taking the company's picture, "Holiday," for the test, Scollard made a cross-country check-up on bookings, which emphasized the growing tendency toward longer runs. The picture, which now is in its ninth week at Los Angeles, has played two, three and four weeks in many spots, where single week bookings were the rule. There are many instances of the picture getting a full week in split-week houses.

Scollard says that the public is prone to neglect theatrical entertainment in times of industrial stress, and feels that the grosses being obtained constitute "an obvious sign of prosperity."

Abilene "Blue" Jam Ends With House Dark Sundays

Abilene, Tex.—Texas' old-time "blue laws," nearly a century old, have won out in a legal battle between city authorities and a local theatre. An agreement has been reached whereby the theatre will remain closed on Sundays. Under the agreement the city will dismiss all court actions pending against the theatre management which grew out of Sunday shows.

The theatre in turn will dismiss an injunction proceeding challenging the right of the city to close the theatre on Sundays and a damage action against a local policeman.

School Shows Hit

Toronto—The Ontario department of education has ruled that halls in school buildings for which annual Government grants are made are not to be rented to outsiders for performances of any kind. This has shut off a considerable number of school halls in which picture and other shows were being presented with regularity. The Government has adopted the policy that exhibitors taking out annual licenses for their theatres are entitled to protection.

Finish Four Varieties

Continued activity at the Brooklyn Vitaphone studio this week has resulted in the completion of four more varieties with prominent Broadway celebrities in the casts. The four are "Envy," the cast including Eric Dressler, Romney Brent and Madge Evans; "The Darling Brute," a slapstick comedy featuring Jack Hazzard; "The Naggers Go South," starring Mr. and Mrs. Jack Norworth, and a musical subject featuring Henry Santrey and his Soldiers of Fortune.

High and Low On Music Row

SAM SERWER, in charge of publicity for all Warner music subsidiaries, has found a new way of creating a favorable impression of songs featured in forthcoming Warner attractions by sending advance copies of sheet music to reviewers of newspapers. Sam claims that the reviewer invariably takes them home and hears them played, thus getting a better slant on a song than if he merely hears the number for the first time in a picture which, being under close scrutiny, demands all of his attention.

THE SONG SLEUTH

THE Projectionists' Round Table

By John F. Rider

THE impedance characteristic of the series resonant circuit is untilized in practice to bypass current around some other unit in the associated system. This characteristic can be illustrated by showing the relation between frequency and impedance and between frequency and current flow.

Take as the basis, a circuit such as that shown in Figure 63A. The individual reactance variations of L and C are shown in Figure 64, illustrating that at some value of frequency,

$X_L = X_C$, and the total impedance is that of the resistance R. For all other frequencies higher and lower than resonance, the remainder of $X_L - X_C$ is some finite value, either negative or positive in design, depending upon whether the capacity reactance or the inductive reactance predominates.

This impedance characteristic is best illustrated by means of the curve shown in Figure 65. Here we find the impedance plotted on the ordinate axis and the frequency plotted on the abscissa. The latter is classified in three ways, "Resonance" at the point O, and a range "lower" than resonance and a range "higher" than resonance. At resonance the impedance is lowest, but it does not reach zero because of the resistance R illustrated in the original circuit. For some frequency either side of this resonant point the impedance shows an increase.

Now, if this curve is inverted, it can be used to indicate the current which would flow through that circuit when it is connected to a source of constant voltage but variable frequency. This is shown in Figure 65A. The ordinate now bears the current designation and the abscissa bears the frequency designation. The latter is identical to that shown in Figure 65. If these two curves are associate, the relation between impedance and current flow becomes evident, and the same is true of the relation between current flow and frequency. The current is maximum at resonance and decreases for frequencies above or below resonance, although the voltage at the source remains constant at call frequencies.

Now this curve is of value when we consider the application of the series resonant circuit to bypass current around another element, as for example in figure 65B. Here we note a source of voltage, this time the phonograph pickup unit, indicated as PH. This device is connected to the primary of the input transformer connected to the amplifier. The primary winding is designated at TP. If we assume that this generator (PH) causes the flow of current through TP at various frequencies and we desire to reduce the current through TP at one frequency, we can connect a series resonant circuit LC in shunt with TP and realize upon the operation shown in Figure 65A.

That is to say, the current flowing through LC, due to the voltage generated in PH, will depend upon the frequency of the voltage. If it is the resonant frequency and the impedance of LC is lower than that of TP at that frequency, most of the current will flow through LC. For frequencies higher and lower than the resonant frequency, the bypassing effect of LC will decrease. If the frequency of the voltage is sufficiently far removed from the resonant frequency of LC, the presence of LC will have no effect upon the current passed through TP. Thus, the series resonant circuit will serve to filter one frequency and keep it out of the associated circuit.

Such is the purpose of the scratch filter and, as a matter of fact, such is the usual design of the scratch filter. Now, if we assume that the circuit LC in Figure 65B has no resistance, it constitutes a practical short circuit upon TP at the resonant frequency, be that value 500, 2,400 or 8,000 cycles, and no current flows through TP at that frequency. Sometimes it is not necessary, in other applications, to bypass all current. In some instances, as for example in speaker circuits, the required condition is the reduction of the current through speaker winding, thereby reducing the volume of sound at that frequency. Perhaps this reduction is 50 per cent. In other words, because of the characteristic of the amplifier or the speaker, the normal current through the speaker must be reduced from .005 ampere to .0025 ampere.

Such a series resonant circuit enables the reduction of the current at the predetermined frequency without interfering with the current through the speaker at other frequencies. In such cases, it isnecessary that the resonant circuit have the correct impedance with respect to the impedance of the speaker coil so that the required division of current take place. Such a condition is shown in electrical form in Figure 65C, where R will represent the impedance in ohms of the filter circuit and R1 will represent the impedance of the speaker coil. By correctly apportioning the filter impedance, any division of current may be secured.

The correct impedance for the filter system is secured by the use of a separate variable resistance R in Figure 65D, or if the D.C. resistance of L is sufficient, by utilizing this resistance as the resistance R. Thus, if the impedance of the speaker coil is 10 ohms at 5,000 cycles and the current is as stated, the value of the shunt impedance to reduce the speaker current at 5,000 cycles or .0025 ampere would be 10 ohms. An approximation of the division of the current between the impedance of the load and the impedance of the filter can be secured from the simple relation.

where $Z_t$ is the impedance of the filter and Z is the impedance of the load. It is the original total current which flowed through the speaker before the filter was applied. Thus if $I_t$ is .005 ampere, Z is 10 ohms and $Z_t$ is 10 ohms, the current through the speaker coil is

$$.005 \times \frac{10}{10 + 10} = .0025 \text{ ampere}$$

There is another means of applying the series resonant circuit for the purpose of controlling the current feed into a circuit. This is shown in Figure 65E. Here the circuit is in series with another element and, while the impedance characteristic of the resonant circuit remains as before, the effect of its use is changed. As was shown in Figure 65A, the current through the circuit is maximum at resonance. Hence is LC in Figure 65E are of such values that the presence of the other winding has no effect upon resonance, the LC circuit will allow the flow of current at resonance into the winding, but will reduce the current at all other frequencies.

Voltage Step-Up in Series Resonant Circuit.—As to the property of voltage step-up secured with the series resonant circuit, it is applied in certain audio amplifiers to secure better or greater response upon one frequency or a narrow band of frequencies. It is a bit premature to discuss this subject at this time, but more detailed data will be published supplementary to what is included at this time. The circuit employed in the audio amplifier is like that shown in Figure 63A, except that the input circuit of the amplifying tube is connected across the inductance L, as in Figure 65F. The voltage is secured from some source of variable frequency. By proper apportionment of the values of C and L, the voltage across L is maintained substantially constant over a large range of frequencies higher than the resonant frequency of LC. At resonance there is available across L, some value of voltage in excess of that available at E, so that amplification is secured within the coupling unit of which C and L are a part.

Power in a Series Circuit at Resonance.—It has been shown that $IX_L = IX_C$ at resonance and since they are opposite in effect, the total voltage across both elements is zero. Consequently, the voltage impressed is used to overcome the reaction of the resistance R in the circuit. The voltage and current are in phase and the energy dissipated in the circuit, or as is usually expressed, the power expended in the circuit is that developed in the form of heat across the resistance. There is no power loss in the capacity or the inductance. This condition was illustrated in the curves published in the preceding installment and erroneously labeled Figure 64.

Parallel Circuit Consisting of Inductance, Capacity and Resistance.—Since capacity, inducandtance and resistance are individual elements, they may be combined in parallel as easily as in series. Such a parallel combination is shown in Figure 66A. R is the resistance, C is the capacity and L is the inductance. All are connected between the same two points in the circuit, consequently these elements are in parallel. Since they are in parallel, the same voltage is impressed across each element and it is possible to determine the current through each branch by considering each element as a separate entity. Thus, if we assign the following numerical values; R is 6 ohms, C is 50 mfds., L is .15 henry, E is 100 volts and F is 100 cycles, we can determine the current through each branch. Thus:

$$I_R = \frac{100}{10} = 10 \text{ amperes}$$

$$I_C = \frac{100}{31.8} = 3.14 \text{ ampere}$$

If the above combination consisted of three resistances and the applied voltage were of D.C. character, resolution of the total current would be simple arithmetic, the sum of the individual branch currents. However, we are concerned with A.C. and varied phase relations. We know from past discussion that the current and voltage are in phase across the resistance R. On the other hand, the current leads the voltage across the capacity and lags the voltage across the inductance. Such a condition was observed in the simple series circuit. From past discussion we further know that the reactions due to the presence of the inductance and that, due to the presence of the capacity, are in the opposite direction. Because of the opposite effects of the current flow through an inductance and through a capacity, that is, when both are shown related to the same impressed voltage, the resultant current must be the difference between these two currents. At this time we are neglecting the current through the resistance.

Previous mention to the current in the inductive branch and the current in the capacitative branch can be clarified by attempting to visualize the conditions in the circuit. We naturally have a total current which divides between the branches in a certain manner. If we neglect the current through the resistance branch and appreciate that the instantaneous effects of the inductive and the capacitative branches are opposite, it is possible to have current in the main circuit and no current through the combination of the capacity and the inductance in parallel.

There naturally will be current in each branch, but since they tend to neutralize each other, the combined current will be less than the current in either branch. If it so happens that the currents are equal in these two branches, the resultant current is zero. If, on the other hand, the value of current in one branch is greater than the current in the other branch, the difference between these two will represent the resultant current in the branches. The total current in the circuit shown in Figure 66A i sthe vector sum of the individual branch currents or

$$I_t = \sqrt{I_R^2 + (I_C - I_L)^2}$$

If we substitute the numerical values of current previously determined,

$$I_t = \sqrt{10^2 + (3.14 - 1.06)^2}$$
$$= 10.2 \text{ amperes}$$

The total impedance of the circuit is

$$Z = \frac{E}{I}$$

Now, this value of 10.2 amperes is less than the arithmetical sum of the individual branch currents and if by chance, the frequency of the line supply is changed to say 58.1 cycles, at which time the reactance of L would be 54.7 ohms and that of C would likewise be 54.7 ohms, the current in the inductive branch would be equal to the current in the capacitative branch and, since their directions are opposite and they are equal, they neutralize and the current in the main circuit would be that due to the resistance R, namely 10 amperes and once agains, Ohm's law would be applicable or

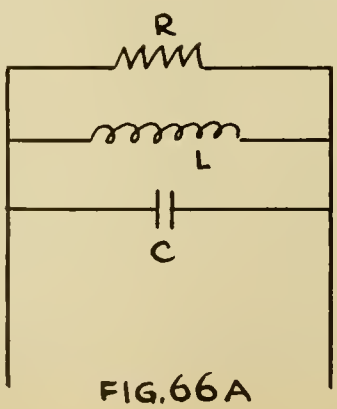

FIG. 66 A

$$I = \frac{E}{R}$$

Referring once more to the original solution of the currents, the current through the capacity is greater than that through the inductance. A certain amount of the capacity reaction overcomes the inductive reaction, and there remains an amount of capacity reaction. The resultant current represents the condition as if the combination of the inductance and capacity were a capacity only, of such value as to cause the flow of the resultant current. This will become clearer as we consider the effect of frequency. At this time, we can say that if, for example, the resultant current of the combination of L and C at 100 cycles and with the voltage applied is such that $I_C - I_L$ is equal to 2.08 amperes, the combination of L and C can be replaced by a capacity which when used at 100 cycles would have a value of reactance which would cause the flow of 2.08 amperes when the impressed voltage is 100 volts. More about this later.

If we assume for the moment that R is absent and that $X_L = X_C$ and further that the inductance L is free of resistance, the current in the inductive branch would equal the current in the capacitative branch. If they are opposite in action and neutralize each other, there would be no current in the main circuit. Such a condition of resonance produces an effect exactly opposite to that experienced with the series resonant circuit. In the parallel combination the impedance is theoretically infinite at resonance and decreases off resonance. If we show this relation in the form of curves, it would resemble the curve shown in Figure 66B and the current through the circuit would be as shown in Figure 66C.

The reduction in impedance each side of the resonant frequency is due to the fact that off resonance the currents in the two reactive branches are unequal. Below resonance, when the frequency is lowered, the capacity reactance increases and the inductive reactance decreases and the circuit as like an inductance. Above the resonant frequency, when the frequency is increased, the capacity reactance decreases and the inductive reactance increases. Therefore, more current flows through the capacity and the complete circuit acts like a capacity.

When working with parallel circuits it is customary to quote the admittance of the circuit rather than the impedance. The term admittance represents the reciprocal of the impedance or

$$Y = \frac{I}{Z}$$

When working with a parallel resonant circuit and in view of the fact that infinite impedance is impossible, it is customary to classify the total hindrance offered by the circuit to the flow of current as the effective resistance which is equal to where R is the resistance of the inductance, and F is the frequency.

The parallel resonant circuit is also a frequency controlled bypass circuit; that is, can be applied as such. Before showing its applications it might be well to quote methods of determining the constants of L and C in order to secure resonance at some predetermined frequency. The following formulae represent the simplest means of solving for the resonant frequency and neglecting the effect of the resistance upon the resonant frequency. This is possible in all audio frequency operation because of the negligible effect of R upon the constants for a simple series or parallel resonant circuit. The resonant frequency

$$F = \frac{1000}{6.28\sqrt{L \text{ in henrys} \times C \text{ in microfarads}}}$$

$$F = \frac{159{,}200}{\sqrt{L \text{ in microhenrys} \times C \text{ in microfarads}}}$$

If the resonant frequency and the inductance are known, the required capacity to resonate at the known frequency may be determined from where C is in microfarads and L is in henrys.

$$C = \frac{159.2^2}{F^2 \times L}$$

The application of the parallel resonant circuit will be considered in Lesson 21.

Erratum Notice.—Two figures in Lesson 19 were designated as Figures 64. This was in error. The correct figure 64 is that illustrating the variation of capacity and inductive resistance with frequency.

'Casey' Citizens Prefer Talkers To Flesh Shows

Kansas City—The Midland theatre, first run Loew house, eliminated its vaudeville in June and reduced its admission price from 60 cents top to 40 cents, telling the public the straight picture policy and the low admission would prevail for eight weeks only.

The eight weeks have passed, the admission price stays at 40 cents and no one on the theatre staff knows anything about the return of the stage shows.

At present the Mainstreet and the Pantages are the only picture houses offering flesh entertainers, the former presenting RKO vaudeville and the Pan using Fanchon & Marco units. The Empress, burlesque, is housing the Mutual wheel.

Last week the Shubert announced it would open Oct. 6 with "It's a Wise Child." The Orpheum, for the last two years presenting dramatic stock, will not reopen.

Five years ago Kansas City was considered a good legitimate show town. The last two years legitimate has had tough sledding, although the Shubert has been booking the best of the road companies. Kansas Citians seem to have adopted the talkers as their favorite theatrical fare.

Publix in Fremont

Fort Wayne, Ind.—A. M. Strauss, local architect, has been employed by Paramount Publix to draw plans for and supervise the construction of a new modern theatre building at Fremont, O., which will cost approximately $250,000. The construction is to start as quickly as possible. Other theatres of the firm to be built in Ohio also will be planned by Strauss. The architect already has completed a theatre at Anderson, Ind., and his Paramount theatre of this city is rapidly nearing completion.

Form New Company

Indianapolis—Articles of incorporation have been filed with the secretary of state here by the Rex Theatre Corp., having a principal place of business in Dunkirk, Ind. The corporation has an initial capital stock of 1,000 shares having no declared par value and is formed to operate a theatre for motion and talking pictures. The first board of directors is composed of Charles F. Hurrle, George W. Haskell, John A. Melloy and George T. Whitaker.

Hit by Sign; Sues

Muncie, Ind.—Etha Keys has entered suit in circuit court against George S. Challis, former operator of a local theatre, asking $5,000 for personal injuries sustained Feb. 14. She charges that while walking in front of the theatre a sign fell striking her on the head and shoulders permanently injuring her. Carelessness is alleged in the fixing of the sign.

Midnight Shows Draw

San Francisco—According to reports, the three local Paramount Publix midnight shows are growing considerably in attendance each week.

Up the River

(Fox)

It's a Pip

(Reviewed by Red Kann)

GO out and treat yourself to a Coca Cola in anticipation of what's coming your way. "Up the River," a prison yarn with an entirely new twist, is sufficient excuse for the extravagance. Take it from us. We've seen; and we've been convinced.

Maurine Watkins, playwright, who demonstrated her cleverness when she wrote the stage play, "Chicago," authored this original, which gets far off the beaten track of jail yarns and stays that way clear through to the end.

From every angle, "Up the River" clicks. To begin with, the yarn is there. The dialogue does full justice to the subtleties and twists of the story. John Ford must have realized what a fine property had been thrown into his lap. This is reflected at every turn of his direction. The cast, too, very patently caught the spirit of the thing. Clear down the line and beginning with Spencer Tracy, the performances are fine, the most unimportant of the lot being Claire Luce, musical comedy performer and novice in talkers.

Tracy, who played "Killer" Mears in "The Last Mile" on the New York stage, is "St Louis" in the picture. Audiences won't know who he is, but it's a cinch they will be asking for lots more of him after "Up the River" makes the rounds. Coupled with him is Warren Hymer, who has been playing tough egg roles in many talkers. They make a marvelous team. Both hard as nails, you see St. Louis as the smart roughneck and Hymer as Dannemora Dan, the dumbbell.

All through its footage, the picture demonstrates a treatment that is rich in comedy, pathos and irony. The yarn deals with crooks and prisons, but the slant is new—to pictures at least. Running all the way from straight comedy to the sardonic, "Up the River" presents criminals for the human beings they are.

The story has St. Louis and Dannemora break jail and then fall out when the former doublecrosses Danny and makes his getaway, leaving Danny to shift for himself. Dannemora gets religion and joins the Brotherhood of Man. The religious fervor burns until Danny spots St. Louis riding around town in a benzine buggy with two swell-looking gals on the leash. Then he bursts into flame, socks St. Louis and both are sent back to prison.

Steve, played with intelligence by Humphrey Bogart, supplies the love interest and the dramatic motivation for the story. Claire Luce, convicted on a bogus stock racket charge, falls for him. When Steve, parole time having arrived, leaves the prison he promises to wait for her. In the interim, Frosby, who walked out on Claire when the going became too hot, gets wise to the love match and follows Steve to his New England home, threatening to expose him to his family if he doesn't co-operate in fleecing the local townspeople. Claire learns of this in prison, confides in St. Louis and Danny who tell her they'll fix Frosby so that he won't cause any more trouble.

Using the annual prison show as an excuse, they make their way out of prison, hop a rattler and arrive in New England in time to secure the bonds Steve's mother had turned over to Frosby, while it is intimated that the shark gets his just desserts at the hands of his sidekicks who suspect Frosby was planning to walk out on them. Their job finished, St. Louis and Danny resume their train jaunt and return to prison in time to win the annual baseball game for their prison alma mater.

Into this has been injected brilliant comedy and thrusts of satire. Tracy and Hymer are excellent in their character shadings. As a matter of fact, if the Fox powers are successful in obtaining material which fits their capabilities, exhibitors have a crackerjack team to figure on for box-office drawing power with this picture as a starter.

In advertising "Up the River" you have no picture names with which to play. Sounds like handicap, and ordinarily is. But promise something unusual and pound that idea hard. You won't be misrepresenting.

Just Like Heaven

Good Entertainment

(Reviewed by Charles F. Hynes)

IT'S too bad that Director R. William Neill saw "Seventh Heaven," for he obviously has tried to pattern this after that outstanding success. Had he given it a different and a little better treatment than he has, he would have had a smash. As it is, the picture is good entertainment, which will appeal to the family trade particularly. It could be speeded up by trimming.

The picture starts out slowly, but gains momentum and has a good climax, which will send them out pleased. One of the faults of direction is that some of the players affect a French accent while the others do not.

The cast is overshadowed by Anita Louise, young leading woman, who looks like a comer. She is not yet 16 but has all-around acting, singing and dancing ability. David Newell is good playing opposite. Gaston Glass gets over a difficult part and Yola D'Avril is a fiery, if not always convincing, Fifi. Thomas Jefferson is effective in a brief part and the balance of the cast is satisfactory.

The story is of the Paris streets, where Tobey, a balloon vender, is ambitious to produce a pageant. In order to win a scholarship, he saves his money and jealously guards his stand, evicting all trespassers. However, he is unable to frighten away Mimi, a little spitfire, who is with a dog circus. He resists her efforts at friendliness, but finally falls in love with her. The girl's grandfather is killed in a fall and Tobey takes the fainting girl into his room, which he turns over to her. He secretly pays all the funeral expenses and doctor bills and then finances the girl's dancing lessons out of the money he had hoarded to stage his pageant. The girl had planned to dance in the pageant, but accepts a theatrical offer when Tobey refuses to go on with plans for the pageant. A cafe dancer who had robbed the girl's grandfather finances the pageant, but it is doomed to obvious failure when the girl insists upon doing the dance in cafe style. Tobey then withdraws his production, but Mimi, told of Tobey's plight, foregoes her scheduled debut to come and dance at the pageant, which Tobey wins.

Feet First

(Lloyd Prod.-Paramount)

Laughs and Thrills

(Reviewed by Bill Crouch)

HAROLD LLOYD'S latest talking picture, "Feet First," combines thrills with laughs and the result is a picture that will please any audience. Parts of the talker are greatly reminiscent of "Safety Last," but with sound effects the thrills are more clearly brought out and are of a hair raising type that often border on the hysterical.

With the Lloyd name—plus entertaining comedy—this picture is plenty of attraction for the exhibitor. The story never lags and many amusing complications keep the film moving at a fast tempo. Will be excellent fare for the better first run theatres and subsequent bookings. The picture will hold up under heavy exploitation as it has the goods.

The story opens with Lloyd working in a Honolulu shoe store. His great desire is to become a shoe salesman. When he meets Barbara Kent, he starts out to do bigger and better things. After a correspondence course study of developing personality he becomes a salesman and meets with success. Striving to break into society he visits an exclusive club where he meets the girl and makes a good impression upon her and her employer, Robert McWade, who is owner of the chain of stores for which Lloyd works.

Next we find him aboard a steamer delivering shoes. He fails to get off the boat in time and has to stay aboard the ship bound for the States. Lloyd spends the greater portion of his time dodging the ship's officers. The rest of the time he spends with Miss Kent and in trying to find food. McWade takes a liking to Lloyd and they are very friendly until Lloyd by mistake gives him a loaded cigar. McWade then becomes infuriated and tells Lloyd that if he wishes to redeem himself he must deliver some papers to the mainland the next day, while the ship is two days from shore.

The ship's officers, finding that Lloyd is a stowaway, try to catch him but he gets into a mail sack and is put aboard the plane that visits the ship. As a result he arrives at the mainland on the right day. However, the sack falls from the mail truck, onto a swinging scaffold and is hoisted up alongside a skyscraper. Here Lloyd gets out of the sack and finds that he can't get on the inside of the building. After many attempts—which are thrilling, he gets to the top of the building and later delivers the papers. Offered a new job by McWade—he proposes and is accepted by Miss Kent.

As with most Lloyd comedies the gags are very good and are new. The thrill sequences where Lloyd is on the outside of the building, are most spectacular and have some very exciting moments. On board the ship some clever comedy situations produce hearty laughs.

The picture is ninety per cent Lloyd who carries the piece with little effort. Barbara Kent, Robert McWade, Lillian Leighton and a shufflin' negro lad by the name of Sleep'n'eat, are well cast and add interest to the talker.

The direction by Clyde Bruckman is above average. He handles the comedy situations very deftly. The photography is particularly noticeable for its merit and adds considerable to the picture. The story is not at all unusual, and in several places somewhat vague. However, this fails to spoil the fun and will be forgotten among the laughs and chills.

Morocco

(Paramount)

Hail a New Garbo

(Reviewed by Jack Grant)

THERE'S a new name going up in lights on theatre marquees from one end of the country to the other. Marlene Dietrich makes an American debut in "Morocco" that will be hailed with superlatives which have not been used since Garbo first swept them off their feet.

Nor does the comparison between the new German importation and the Garbo end there. They look and play so much alike that the after-preview lobby chatter concerned nothing else. Physically the resemblance is remarkable with Dietrich, if anything, having a bit the better of the deal in beauty. Garbo's insouciance that approaches insolence is exactly duplicated on the screen by Dietrich. Both radiate the same brand of sex.

As far as can be judged by a single appearance, Marlene Dietrich probably is capable of a greater range of characterization than Garbo. For one thing she has no accent with which to contend. She sings with the nasal inflection of the French, an impression heightened by the fact that her first number in "Morocco" is in that language. But her reading of English dialogue is delivered in a deep-throated voice nearly entirely devoid of the suggestion of a Continental origin.

Although the billing of "Morocco" reads Gary Cooper and Marlene Dietrich, both the story values and the cutting reverse that order of importance. Obviously the release was framed to introduce Dietrich as ostentatiously as possible. Paramount knows full well what a bet it has in this girl. Cooper's name will draw patrons in, but they will leave talking Dietrich.

The part she plays was intelligently chosen and ably directed by Josef Von Sternberg, her discoverer. She is essentially a woman of mystery in the plot action and the past that sends her to Morocco is never disclosed. Playing such a role makes her personality all the more alluring.

The picture opens with the arrival of Dietrich in Morocco. Quartered there is the Foreign Legion battalion to which Cooper is attached. They meet when she makes her first appearance as an entertainer at a local cafe. Cooper is interested in her only as another of a series of many conquests which include an affair with a superior officer's wife.

Adolphe Menjou, as a wealthy man about town, is also interested in Dietrich, but his intentions are more honorable. Cooper is about to desert the Legion to avoid trouble over the officer's wife and plans to take Dietrich with him. But, with the realization of how much more Menjou can provide for the girl, he changes his mind and goes into action with his company.

Dietrich, left behind, agrees to marry Menjou. Their engagement supper is broken up by the music of the returning Legionnaires' band. She runs into the street to find Cooper and is told he was left wounded in another town. The report is found false when she travels to the hospital. Cooper was transferred at his request to another company which is moving back into the desert the next day. Knowing that she cannot go through with her wedding to Menjou, she joins the little group of women who follow the soldiers and marches into the desert after her man.

Von Sternberg has embellished this tale with top-notch production values. It is slow paced, but the spots where the picture drags will doubtless be removed by further cutting before release.

Splendid use of the camera has been made to keep the tempo moving and composition and mass details are noteworthy. Mention should also be made of the intelligent use of sound with superfluous dialogue eliminated. When the characters talk they have something to say.

Cooper finds in Legionnaire Tom Brown one of his best roles. He delivers a well conceived and robust portrayal. Menjou makes a distinguished return to American productions and the rest of the cast are uniformly excellent.

But it is Marlene Dietrich about whom the talk will center. From every angle the picture has been built around her. "Morocco" will make a strong bid for position on the best ten lists of critics at the end of the year though it may not make much money for Paramount. Regardless of the financial returns on this initial venture, it is predicted that the name of Marlene Dietrich on subsequent releases will mean real money at the box-office.

Sunny

None Too Bright Musical

(Reviewed by Jack Grant)

TAKE four dances by Marilyn Miller, two songs, a typical musical comedy plot filmed with but slight variation of the original stage script and you have the formula for "Sunny." Designed as a follow-up to "Sally," it will do business in the spots where the former Miller picture was successful. But chances are doubtful that it will prove as sensational.

"Sunny" has been adapted to the screen with minimum imagination. In recognition of the public's current ukase against filmusicals, the song numbers have been held down to a single solo and one duet. Both are repeated a couple of times but never accompanied by the usual dancing-singing chorus. In fact, there is no one even remotely resembling a chorus girl in the production.

The dancing of Miss Miller is undoubtedly the picture's highlight. They have been generous with her routines, giving a tap, burlesque ballet, eccentric and an interpretative fox hunt number. The comedy stepping is performed with Joe Donahue as partner.

Miss Miller's singing voice is recorded better than in her previous effort, the familiar "Who" being particularly well delivered. Her acting has gained assurance and lost something of its charm in the process. The two roles of "Sally" and "Sunny" are as similar as their titles, both falling under the general classification of the Cinderella theme. But the appeal of the first has not been duplicated in the second. "Sunny" is much more matter-of-fact and correspondingly artificial.

Little need to recount the story in much detail. Sunny, a circus girl pledged by her father to wed an Englishman she does not love, becomes a stowaway on an ocean liner to America. On the boat is Lawrence, the man she really loves, but, who, in turn, has a fiancee. In order to be near him and also to be allowed to enter the States without a passport, Sunny marries his best friend, Joe Donahue. It is marriage in name only and divorce is quickly sought after landing. A misunderstanding causes her to start back to England, but Gray realizes Sunny is the only girl for him just in time to stop her. The usual clinch provides a happy ending.

All this is told with the deadly seriousness with which musical comedy books are always filmed. On the stage such plots merely fill the waits between song numbers. By omitting the music on the screen, undue emphasis is placed on story construction. It suffers accordingly.

The only two people who mean anything in entertainment value are Marilyn Miller and Joe Donahue, an easy playing, likeable comedian. Brother of Jack Donahue who originated the role he now plays, Joe won a long-term First National contract as a result of this performance. It is apparent why.

O. P. Heggie is badly cast in the Joseph Cawthorn stage part and fails to get all his laughs. Part of this fault must be borne by the lack of new gags in the dialogue. Lawrence Gray has little opportunity to be more than the typical juvenile. The rest are bit assignments although Judith Vosselli and Mackenzie Ward make their roles worthwhile.

Mention should be made of the possible confusion in the titles of "Sunny" and "Sally." This is dictated by an overheard snatch of conversation at the preview. A woman left the theatre remarking how she wanted her daughter, now in dancing school, to see Marilyn Miller. She was going to watch for the release of "Sally." It might be a good thing to keep this in mind when preparing advertising copy for "Sunny." Stress the fact it is the second Miller feature.

The Big Trail

(Fox)

In-the-Bag Spectacle

(Reviewed by Red Kann)

YOU remember "The Covered Wagon," of course. Here's one of the same type, produced as a spectacle de luxe, but in taller form. It's a money picture.

As bait for the public, the picture offers love interest, a hoke brand of villainy, an assortment of physical thrills, production values in large slices and comedy supplied by El Brendel and Russ Powell.

The bring-the-kids-back-to-the-theatres movement, in particular, will get its greatest impetus to date from "The Big Trail," for here is the type of picture that will make the juveniles remember how to stamp their feet, clap their hands and whistle. The hero is very much of a hero and the heroine is rich in traditional sweetness and purity, while the villain, right down to his bushy whiskers, is the dirty dog you would expect him to be.

You've got to hand it to Raoul Walsh for his treatment. In "The Big Trail" he had a story of epic theme. But, stripping it down to its essentials, the yarn is in reality a Western, stepped into the glorified class by virtue of the sweep injected in the form of a production embellishment. The director demonstrated himself to be clever enough to follow the traditional formula for all Westerns. That accounts for the direct, matter-of-fact, and even routine type of performance and explains why hero, heroine and villain play their parts as they do.

In other words, subtleties in histrionics are the bunk for Westerns. Walsh knew it and sidetracked the danger of attempting otherwise.

In story value the picture is largely a series of episodes tied loosely together with a love skein in which John Wayne and Marguerite Churchill are the sweeties and Tyrone Power head man of the crew of bad boys, in whose ranks are Ian Keith and Charles Stevens.

You see the Eastern pioneers setting out from Westport to make the grade of the Oregon trail and to extend the borders of the American republic to the Pacific Northwest.

John Wayne, ex-football player and former technician on the Fox lot, plays the scout who leads the pioneers through the wilderness to their promised land. He falls for Miss Churchill and she for him, although it takes a lot of footage for her to admit the fact. Keith is angling for the girl as well and almost lands her, while Wayne and Power establish their cordial dislike for each other at the outset.

The scout, pledged to avenge the death of a trapper buddy, gradually establishes the fact it was Power who engineered the murder. The story thread demonstrates that Power knows of Wayne's suspicion and arranges with Keith to make way with the hero. Several attempts prove abortive; Keith is shot as he attempts to murder Wayne and the wagon team is carried through to the Oregon country. With the safety of the pioneers assured, Wayne sets out in a snowstorm to avenge his pal's murder, finds Lopez, Power's sidekick, deserted and frozen on the trail, and later throws the knife that brings the villain to his end.

It is, however, the sweep of the spectacle and the lavishness with which the production was made that gives it its money-making slant. Walsh went all the way and spent almost $2,000,000 on the negative before the job was over. You see innumerable covered wagons, hundreds of extras, long and beautiful "pan" shots of the wagon train on the road. There is a buffalo hunt, the fording of a river wherein horses and people are swept down stream by the force of the current; a snowstorm, a good, old-fashioned but nevertheless thrilling Indian attack on the wagons and the lowering of wagons, cattle, women, children and men over the mountainside that blocks the trail to the west.

The sound effects are extremely effective. Indian yells, the thunder of horses' hoofs, the braying of oxen, the shots of the muleteers—the whole business is there. It may sound juvenile, but to this writer the gathering of the Indian clans, the thumping of the war drums and the whoops of the redskins as they prepared for battle, provided a kick that still lingers. It's positively blood-curdling.

"The Big Trail" is Wayne's first picture, but far from his last. The boy is tall, good-looking and not much of an actor. At least, not much on the basis of the picture. But his inexperience as a trouper serves him in good stead, since it results in an extremely natural, if not dramatically forceful, performance. The women will go for him without doubt. That settles the immediate future for him at least.

Miss Churchill has little to do. She is never called upon to do anything but the perfunctory heroine stuff and does that satisfactorily enough. Tyrone Power plays in the best traditions of the ten-twenty-thirty villain and, as such, does a good job. Ian Keith, gambler gentleman, is O. K. in a part that isn't supposed to and won't elicit sympathy from the public. El Brendel is pretty much dragged in by the ears to supply the laughs and gets away with the job. The mob throughout the country has probably seen enough of him to guffaw on sight.

Reno

(Sono Art-World Wide)

Fair, But Has Angles

(Reviewed by Charles F. Hynes)

THIS has big exploitation possibilities due to the title and theme, but the picture doesn't live up to them. It's fair entertainment and carries interest because it marks Ruth Roland's return to the screen, but the return is not a very auspicious one. The big angle is the title and divorce mill slant, which can be worked up for a big campaign.

The story hasn't a great deal of wallop, following fairly obvious lines. Montagu Love and Kenneth Thompson do good work, and Sam Hardy is okeh in a part which doesn't call for much. The frame-up for divorce evidence is not convincing and the court seems to take pretty much for granted in not summoning some of the witnesses at the barbecue, who would have done much to offset the damaging evidence introduced by the scheming husband.

Ruth is the wife of a tyrannical roue (Montagu Love). Deciding upon a divorce, she leaves for Reno with her four-year-old son. En route she meets an old sweetheart (Kenneth Thompson), who stops off at Reno, not knowing that also is Ruth's destination. The husband appears on the scene and begs forgiveness. This is part of his scheme to frame his wife. He pretends to go back to New York, but has the maid phone Ruth her son has disappeared, and she rushes home from a party in the company of the former sweetheart. The maid, paid by the husband, leaves the house, and Ruth is caught in Thompson's arms, the latter having asked her for a goodbye kiss on the eve of his departure for South America. The court places the child in the custody of a matron, pending the divorce trial. In the interim, the husband's duplicity is exposed and he is killed while speeding to kidnap the child.

Remote Control

(M-G-M)

Amusing

(Reviewed by Jack Grant)

CONSIDERING all the trouble M-G-M had in making this Haines opus, it turned out a pretty good little comedy. Four directors in all tried their hands at transcribing the stage play to the screen. It might be guessed, therefore, that little of the original remains.

"Remote Control" was a mystery thriller which met with fair success on Broadway. No element of mystery enlivens the film. Rather is it a more or less well connected series of gags about a wise-cracking announcer in a radio station.

The opening is the conventional Haines flirtation stuff. Bill is introduced as a sort of a Merton of the Mike. J. C. Nugent, his employer, discovers him practicing talking in approved announcer style into a dummy microphone during working hours. The boss hurries Bill out to wait on a customer, none other than Marv Doran. Bill, as usual, flirts outrageously with the girl, pursuing her into the street. Here there is a whale of a laugh sequence with an Austin. Mary gets in the car and tries to drive away. Haines, on his knees on the curb, pulls the tiny auto back with one finger each time she starts off.

Bill gets fired for loafing, so trails Mary into a radio broadcasting station. There he encounters Charlie King, an old pal, and, incidentally, Mary's brother. Charlie tells his troubles in putting the station on a paying basis and Bill volunteers his aid.

An advertisement for talent brings Benny Rubin, Polly Moran, Cliff Edwards and Roscoe Ales to apply for jobs. Each does his or her specialty, thereby making it unnecessary for Metro to make an all-studio revue this year.

The ad also attracts the attention of John Miljan, head of the Ghost Gang, crooks par excellence. Miljan sees possibilities of directing his gangsters by broadcasting instructions and signs at the radio station as a professional mystic and seer. This phase of the plot and the robbery of the Junior League girls are the only bits of business retained from the original play. In the play, however, a mystery centered about the leader of the Ghosts. The audience is not in on the know as in the picture.

Haines becomes troublesome to Miljan in broadcasting the instructions to his mob. He orders Bill kidnaped and plans to bump him off during the gang's final bank robbery. Bill finds a way in tipping off the police by a series of newspaper headlines. This incident is a trifle far-fetched, but may probably go unquestioned by most audiences.

Nor will they notice the way in which characters are introduced and dropped. Charlie King, for example, has a few lines of dialogue concerning the condition of business at the broadcasting station, then sings one song on the first makeshift program, and is seen no more. Whether Haines succeeded in putting over the station is never again touched upon. Several other such loose tags and leads will brand "Remote Control" as a remake to the trade, but the public probably won't tumble.

They will come to laugh at the new antics of Haines and get what they came for. As a tailor-made vehicle for Haines the release is exactly that. Bill has some genuinely funny business and sells it for all it is worth. The Austin gag is a classic. But they ought to keep Haines away from the dinner table. Playing with food for laughs has occurred in so many of his pictures that it is almost becoming a trademark.

The acting honors go without question to John Miljan. His suave work in a score of recent films should result in a real assignment some day. Mary Doran, at times brutally photographed, is also capable of better roles. The rest are in and out and all delivering—Benny Rubin, in particular, laying them in the aisles. Eddie Nugent, listed on the cast sheet, has been completely cut.

Edward Sedgwick is credited with direction, being the last of a quartette to attack the script. And his fine comedy hand is apparent.

"Remote Control," despite the trouble Metro had with it, should prove one of the most popular of Haines releases. It tops the last three or four with margin to spare.

Comedy shorts will have to be strong to stand up. Musicals and novelties better choices.

Misses Fire

(Reviewed by Robert Hoge)

THIS British production is based on the sinking of the Titanic by an iceberg, but it doesn't get over. It is too casual throughout, and, while of necessity it would have proved difficult to weave an airtight story about the disaster, the director, E. A. DuPont, has not capitalized to the full the drama inherent in the event.

The impact is a studio shot and is ridiculously artificial, the "berg" that crashes into the side of the liner having the appearance of a papier mache rock. And the blow itself did not seem to be of sufficient force to burst open the plates. Furthermore, the steamer seemed to be traveling sideways, or, at least, to be at a standstill.

Immediately after the collision life on board seems to become more tranquil than ever. The bump doesn't appear to have alarmed anyone, although the captain, played by Sydney Lynn in an atrociously amateurish manner, and Lanchester, the ship's officer (John Longden), talk interminably about the affair, but do not seem to think it necessary to tell the passengers of the danger they are facing. The tempo at this point is so slow that the audience almost forgets that there is about to unfold a film recital of one of the greatest sea tragedies in history.

The chief figures in the story are a group of first class passengers who drink tea and amiably wonder what caused the jar they felt, although flashes of water pouring into the hold are cut in from time to time. The ship's officer wanders in occasionally to chat with them. What the rest of the passengers are doing is not depicted. This unusual letdown in the drama serves to lessen interest and suspense, so that the climax falls flat.

The picture packs a punch in the scenes showing the passengers taking to the lifeboats, with an officer shooting two men who try to beat the women and children to it. In the meantime the chief actors remain in the salon. They have been warned that the ship is doomed but there is little in the way of fear.

Out on the deck sits the ship's band, playing a variety of inappropriate airs that are so maddeningly unmelodious and nerve-wracking that one wonders why the musicians weren't pitched into the sea. One rendition was "Pack up Your Troubles in Your Old Kit Bag." But at the end, as in the case of the Titanic sinking, they started to play "Nearer, My God, to Thee," and the picture faded out without further ado.

Longden stands out as the best actor in the cast, the others giving average performances, including Monty Banks. The latter essayed a few attempts at comedy, but couldn't pull a laugh out of a New York audience. Recording was excellent. With a more compact scenario —the picture runs 90 minutes—and better direction the production might have stood up well in American houses.

Give it plenty of comedy support.

Produced by Elstree Productions. Distributed by Harold Auten. Directed by E. A. Dupont. Adapted from Ernest Raymond's play, "The Berg." Photographed by Charles Rosher. Running time 90 minutes. Release date not set.

Short Subjects

Pure and Simple

(Darmour-RKO)

Great Laugh Comedy

LOUISE FAZENDA has the chief role in this comedy, which is a sure-fire laugh getter and will stand up in any house. Don t be afraid to book this one, as it has plenty of appeal for both old and young.

The story deals with a show troupe which becomes shipwrecked. George Chandler, Fazenda and a bevy of beautiful girls are cast upon a desert isle. The women are all after George, who cares only for Louise. A scene in which a giant gorilla enters the camp and raises havoc with the castaways is a thriller. Finale shows Fazenda left with the gorilla as the others are rescued.

Plenty of production value and capable direction by Lewis R. Foster make this a good piece of entertainment. Laughs are plentiful and not forced. Running time, 20 minutes.

Pep up your bill with it.

Red, Green and Yellow

(Paramount)

Audience Stuff

THIS short subject has an idea and that proves its making. Lulu McConnell, always good for a laugh, in this is the much-abused wife of a husband who figures he's the same way. Outside their window is a police tower with the red, green and yellow lights blinking alternately as traffic moves in its several directions.

In desperation the husband suggests the wife spiel her piece when the light goes green. He gets his rebuttal when the light goes yellow and, regardless of where they end off, both shut up when the light goes red. Original and amusing idea. Directed by Mort Blumenstock. Running time, 11 minutes.

Touchdown

(Pathe)

Dynamite

THIS series of six "Football With Knute Rockne" one-reelers started off with a bang and looked like a box-office bet, but in this issue, No. 4, the Notre Dame coach vents his spleen against those responsible for putting a curb on the shift. He names a half dozen other universities and charges that when they violate the rule providing for a complete stop before the ball is passed they draw penalties of only five yards, while Notre Dame invariably is penalized fifteen yards. His tone is bitterly sarcastic throughout, and his invectives will arouse considerable resentment, we believe. It's not the sporting thing to do. Controversy has no place in entertainment. Running time, 10 minutes.

Use your own judgment in running it.

Burger Leaves to Take Over Australian Post

Sam Burger, M-G-M district chief, has left for the Coast on the first leg of his journey to Australia, where he is to represent the company. He will sail from Vancouver.

Discontented Cowboys

(Universal)

Gets Laughs

CHARLIE MURRAY and George Sidney, taking a vacation on a "dude" ranch, are forced to perform all sorts of menial tasks in line with the owner's decision to make men out of them. While this short possesses no story there is a continuous succession of gags, most of which garner chuckles with a number of good laughs thrown in. The most amusing sequence shows Sidney falling asleep while detailed to count sheep passing through a gate. The trick worked that time. Will be enjoyed by all types of audiences. Directed by Albert Ray. Running time, 18 minutes.

If you need comedy on a bill book this one.

Voice of Hollywood, No. 20

Some Good Gags

JAMES HALL is the m.c. in this number of the Voice of Hollywood series and surprises by a song which was written especially for the series and is titled "The Voice of Hollywood." It seems that a certain song writer had been pursuing him for days trying to get in with his composition. Finally, he comes through a skylight and Merna Kennedy gives him an introduction to Hall, who sings the song. Jackie Coogan tries vainly to tee off on a miniature golf course, which furnishes a few laughs.

Knockout

Okay

THIS is No. 3 in the Leatherpusher series, and it stacks up better than its predecessors. With Kane Richmond as the clean-cut pugilist and Sally Blane, Nora Lane and Joan Marsh contributing the romance, and Sam Hardy the laughs, this short is highly interesting throughout, although we are pained to inform you that the hero is the one who gets the knockout. This series is being made in an extremely intelligent manner and with production values, and rates bookings in the best of theatres. Directed by Albert Kelley. Running time, 20 minutes.

A great tonic for a weak show.

The Village Barber

(M-G-M)

A Dandy

THE laughs are generously sprinkled in this fine sound cartoon, being further adventures of Flip the Frog. Except for an element of sameness common to most cartoons, it clicks nicely. The ending is a wow, showing the basso of the quartette crashing through the floor to go down after the last low note—and coming up with it. It received a generous hand at the New York Capitol. Running time, 7 minutes.

For any kind of bill.

Swing, You Sinners

(Paramount)

Diverting

THE clever cartoon pen of Max Fleischer again demonstrates itself in this Talkartoon. An offstage chorus sings the lyrics to the rhythm of the action and the result is usually diverting. The cartoon hero is this time taken into a grave-yard with the absurd results that you might well imagine. Worth a play. Running time, 9 minutes.

O.K. for heavy feature.

Short Subjects

Strange As It Seems, No. 2

(Universal)

Excellent

IF this series can keep up the pace it has set, particularly with this issue, it will prove a draw even in the best theatres. Not only are the subjects pictured decidedly unusual, but the use of Multicolor throughout adds greatly to the appeal. A synchronized lecture describes the scenes.

The first unit shows a man building an ark in Olympia, Wash., in the belief that there will be another flood in 1932. He's going to be Noah the Second. After an effective shot of Crater Lake, its beauty enhanced by color, there are scenes showing the unique sport of hunting Goe-Ducks on Puget Sound. They are huge clams, their bodies resembling ducks, although encased in shells, and with long, sausage-like appendages. They bury themselves quickly and squirt juices at their pursuers.

The most unique feature shows an East Indian swallowing goldfish, giving them a swim in his stomach, and ejecting them. Later he drinks the entire contents of the fish bowl, adds a chaser of kerosene and sprays the mixture upon a brassier, creating huge flames, whereupon he ejects the gallon or so of water and extinguishes the fire. It's all done by muscular control of the organs. The feature is based on John Hix's newspaper cartoons. Running time, 10 minutes.

Reserve a spot on your program for this series. It will create talk and interest everyone.

"We, We, Marie"

(Universal)

A Wow

IF your audiences don't shake the house with their roars as they view No. 2 of the Slim Summerville series you might as well go out of business. This is one of the funniest two-reelers we have ever seen. While Summerville, particularly, and Eddie Gribbon and Pauline Garon do great trouping, it's the large number of fresh gags and the excellent direction of Albert Ray that make it outstanding. After all, it's the material that counts. This short has enough story for a feature, and it is impossible to outline it in this space. The climax comes when Gribbon, the hard-boiled sergeant, finds Bugler Slim wearing the brassiere he had presented to his French sweetie. The laughs in this are practically continuous. The picture is filmed in the new Magnachrome style for wide screen, improving it greatly. Running time, 21 minutes.

Give your audiences a treat—and plug it.

Won By A Neck

Okay

FOR those who find Lloyd Hamilton's stuff entertaining, there are plenty of light laughs in his latest. It features Lloyd as a newly made detective who suddenly and accidentally finds himself "elected" to get "One Shot Louie." This is done, of course, unconsciously, and the hero is acclaimed by the entire department (of six coppers).

With the crime wave prevalent, it presents a timely topic in a fairly amusing manner. Running time, 18 minutes.

Run with a dramatic short and a comedy-drama feature.

The Detective

(Universal)

Good

THAT producers of shorts are waking up to the fact that the public is tired of the repetitiousness of cartoons is further demonstrated by this Oswald comedy. Believe it or not, it packs a plot and it's filled with laughs. The rabbit, wrongfully accused of the murder of a robin with a bow and arrow, goes to trial for his life. But Oswald, using his weapon first as a violin and then as a 'cello, wins the hearts of the jury with his harmony and is set free. Chuckful of humor. Running time, 7 minutes.

Give it a play in any kind of house.

Tin Types

(Vitaphone Varieties)

Pleasing

CHICK YORKE and Rose King do an old-fashioned rural comedy skit which is extremely diverting. Both are capable performers and their songs and dances provide no end of mirth.

Old time comedy songs form the basis for most of the performance and these are expertly delivered. One reel.

Good on any bill.

Racqueteers

(Pathe)

Okay

GRANTLAND RICE invades the field of "rackets" in this Sportlight, with Bill Tilden giving a little spiel on tennis, together with a demonstration; Lou Magnolia telling all about the game of Jai-a-lai, with action illustrations of the speedy Spanish game, and winding up with a few shots of lacrosse being played at West Point. Rice gives an introductory talk. This will interest all types of patrons. Running time, 11 minutes.

A welcome novelty on any screen.

Don't Give Up

BUSTER WEST, "pop" Keith vaude headliner, makes his bow in pictures. It only registers in a so-so manner, with material given West of a pretty weak nature. His unique twisting and light-footedness plays a large part in building up laugh angles. Will get by with most audiences. Running time, 19 minutes.

Spot this one with a strong feature.

Irish Stew

Entertaining

WHILE the greater portion of this one follows the lines of average cartoons, a few sequences are sufficiently favorable to bring it out of the class of cut-and-dried pen and ink screenfare. The musical accompaniment is good, with a haunted castle episode giving the big kick. Running time, 7 minutes.

Okay to lighten a bill featuring a dramatic subject.

Audio Review, No. 41

Lukewarm

NOTHING to write home about. The units consist of pictures of the Pacific Ocean washing the beach in California, an Egyptian boy climbing a pyramid, a view of "Broadway's last farm," with two lads hoeing a garden in a vacant lot, and four Welsh miners singing something or other. Running time, 7 minutes.

Spot it into a strong program.

Balaban & Katz Demand Stronger B. O. Film Draw

Chicago—Stricter box-office requirements than have ever before been designated for pictures playing Loop houses have been put in effect by Publix-B. & K. here. The move has been made to clear up an unprecedented number of unplayed pictures booked for the circuit's downtown houses. It is also an answer to complaints made by outlying exhibitors at the recent zoning conferences here. Outlying houses are obliged to wait on B. & K. for release of practically their entire list of pictures.

The higher grosses demanded of pictures at Loop box-offices shortens their runs from one to two weeks. Present profit requirements are such that all B. & K. run houses are down to an almost uniform two weeks schedule. A picture's gross has to be extraordinary to get a third week.

This is the second boost of gross requirements the circuit has made in the past six months. The first showed marked improvement in the local release situation, but a series of long run pictures in mid-summer put the circuit as far behind on play dates as ever. The resultant squawks from outlying exhibitors and even neighborhood theatre patrons, as well as B. & K.'s desire to keep down the levy on unplayed pictures, brought about the second boost.

There have been no runs of more than two weeks since the last edict went into effect. At McVickers, "The Spoilers" and "Mohy Dick" got only two weeks apiece despite good grosses. At the Roosevelt, "Journey's End" had only nine days, while "Monte Carlo," which followed, rated two weeks only, although grosses were better than average. At United Artists, "Follow Thru" and "What a Widow" were in the money at the end of their second weeks, particularly the latter picture, but both were replaced, regardless.

Miehle Addresses S.M.P.E.

Chicago—The Chicago chapter of the S. M. P. E. had as its guest speaker at the regular monthly meeting Rudolph Miehle, motion picture technician of New York. About twenty-five members were in attendance at the meeting, held at the Webster Hotel. It was stated that one hundred Chicago delegates will attend the national meeting of the Society. November 6 was set as the date for the election of officers of the Chicago chapter.

RKO Staff Revamped

Chicago—Thorough revamping of the RKO Chicago sales force has been completed by William "Bill" Brumberg, newly appointed branch manager. The changes involve the following appointments: Frank Young, for the past seven years a salesman with United Artists in Chicago, will handle the Loop and certain outlying territories; George R. Giroux, formerly an M-G-M "Legion of Honor" salesman at Los Angeles, to country territory; L. K. Rosenfeld, formerly with the RKO Cincinnati office, to country territory; Harry Brown, formerly Pathe Milwaukee salesman, to country territory.

William Brumberg

Ed Phelps and Mike Kahn, RKO salesmen, will continue to handle Chicago neighborhood territory.

Brumberg, widely known throughout the Chicago territory, was host to a continual stream of well-wishers during his first week in his new post.

General Register and Midwest in Combine

Chicago—Expansion program which he says will be international in scope is to be launched following amalgamation of General Register Corp. of Illinois and Mid-West Ticket & Supply Co., according to D. H. Finke, president of Mid-West.

Capitalization of Mid-West will be increased to $1,000,000 to care for this expansion, which contemplates a trade advertising campaign establishment of sales and service offices in strategic locations throughout the world and extension of the company's ticket service in America. The Mid-West Ticket & Supply Co. has been in operation for the past ten years, and was recently instrumental in effecting the merger of the Ansell-Simplex Ticket Co. Further development of Mid-West's service policy on Automatic and Simplex ticket registers is contemplated in the company's future plans.

Frank Buys in Whiting

Chicago—A. S. Frank, former owner of the Paulina theatre, has taken over the Capital at Whiting, Ind. The house was reopened recently by Frank after renovations. A. J. Ohresk was the former owner of the Capital.

"Bluenoses" Lose Again in Evanston; Continue Battle

Chicago—Evanston proponents of Sunday shows gained their first victory in a five months' fight to legalize the showings when Master in Chancery George E. Gorman ruled last week in favor of granting the injunction against the city, which has been asked by the theatre owners. Gorman's ruling was that "the vote of the people expresses a public policy in favor of Sunday showing and renders nugatory the provisions of the ordinance preventing Sunday theatre entertainment."

The ruling referred to Evanston's vote of last April, which gave Sunday shows a majority of 56. The city council refused to act on the results of the referendum on the grounds that the majority was polled in only two out of seven of the city's wards. The theatre owners retaliated by asking an injunction to prevent the city from interfering with Sunday theatre openings. Master Gorman's ruling was on this injunction. It will be referred to a court and judge this week, and though it is not obligatory for a judge to accept a master's recommendation, it is the usual course.

William Lister, corporation counsel for Evanston, received the master's report and stated that the city would continue to fight Sunday shows. In the event a permanent or temporary injunction is granted, he said, the matter will be taken to the Appellate court.

UFA Film Draws German Patrons

Chicago—Local popularity of "Melody of the Heart" (UFA), now in its third week at the Castle here, is causing widespread comment in exhibitor circles. The large German population of the city accounts in part for the picture's box-office success, as Dick Beck, manager of the Castle, has estimated that 80 per cent of the attendance is of that nationality. Many patrons, he said, told him it was the first time they had ever attended a motion picture performance. Daily holdouts for the three weeks of the picture's run have been the order. At one time there were 450 prsons waiting outside. The seating capacity of the Castle is 300.

Cantor Exhibits Scotch Streak; Gags His Gags

Chicago—Eddie Cantor refused to go to work for newspapermen who were down to meet his train last week. Not a single wisecrack was uttered by the stage and screen comic who, apparently, couldn't see the percentage in being funny for nothing—or for publicity, either. Eddie was willing only to discuss such mundane topics as politics, philosophy, economics and the League of Nations. The reporters either didn't understand what he was talking about or else they were not interested, for no mention of Eddie's conversational choices found its way into print.

"How about the stage, Eddie?" he was asked.

"I'm through with it," he exclaimed. "All I intend to do from now on is to make one movie a year. Maybe a personal appearance now and then, but no shows. I think the stage will continue to be in a bad way until people quit buying luxuries like food and shoes, only, and get back to the necessities of life."

Eddie was accompanied here by his wife and her sister. He made two appearances at the United Artists Theatre where his picture, "Whoopee," opened.

Warnerites Shun Office Wives as Spouses Tumble

Chicago—Local Warner Club, organized during the summer, nearly broke up in a riot at the first event of the club's fall social season. The membership is comprised of all employees of local Warner office and subsidiaries. Wives and families of members are also welcomed at social events staged by the club. This combination threw the gathering into an uproar when, as part of the evening's entertainment, Warner's "Office Wife" was unreeled. Husbands, visibly disturbed, refrained from speaking to stenographers for the balance of the evening.

A dinner preceded the screening, which was given at the Stevens Hotel. The club now is laying plans for a Hallowe'en dance.

A New Racket

Chicago—Chicago's youngest "One-Eyed" Connolly demonstrated his prowess at the Illington theatre here. The youngster, three years old, succeeded in convincing a policeman that his mother was inside the theatre, and under the guidance of the law passed the ticket taker and watched the picture. He was still in his seat when the show closed and, unable to identify himself, was taken to the juvenile detention home to await a claimant.

Wabash Ave.—South

CHICAGO.

THE censors were upheld in refusing to issue a permit for the Willis Kent production, "The Primrose Path," by Circuit Judge Thomas Taylor, Jr. The court, ruling that the picture "had lascivious scenes and actions, and is immoral," denied Si Greiver's petition for a mandamus to compel the censors to issue a permit. The picture has been under consideration by the board for about three months. It was passed in Indiana and in downstate "church" counties.

Frank Young leaving United Artists is like a middle-aged man, noted all his life for his sobriety, suddenly going out on a prolonged bender. Frank's record at U. A. is probably unparalleled at any local exchange, both as to performance and length of service. He came to U. A. about seven years ago, shortly after Goldwyn was taken over by Metro. His Chicago film history dates back about eighteen years, and he was in the business prior to that. At U. A., Frank repeatedly garnered local sales records and was inevitably among the first five in district and national drives. He goes to RKO this week.

The visitors who came to congratulate Bill Brumberg on his accession to the RKO office, if placed end to end, would reach all the way back to the home office, a conservative exhibitor estimates. And that "personality" sales force Brumberg is putting into action will be hard to ignore.

Harry Larch is getting to be a stranger to his own office, what with the recent additions to his territory keeping him on the road most of the time.

Nab Publicity Man For Theatre Stick-Up

Chicago—John Arensdorf, publicity man for the Orpheum at Sioux City, Ia., was arrested here and turned over to police of that city after he had confessed to obtaining $2,450 in a holdup of the theatre.

Arensdorf was taken into custody by postal inspectors after he had mailed an insured package containing the money to himself at Kansas City and then remailed it to himself at Chicago. His arrest occured when he appeared at the post office here to claim the package.

Children Barred From Theatres as Result of Plague

Kansas City, Kan.—Children under 15 years of age have been banned from local theatres due to an epidemic of infantile paralysis. Exhibitors have been warned that they will be closed by the police if they violate the ban. City schools have been closed for two weeks and all children have been prohibited from congregating in public places.

There is no fear of a quarantine in Kansas City, Mo., according to health officials, but the Kansas children are asked not to cross the state line into Missouri.

Seattle to Get Stock Company

Seattle—After an entire season with but one legitimate stage attraction appearing here, Seattle is again to see the spoken drama make a bid for popular favor now devoted solely to the spoken film.

Beginning October 18, a stock company sponsored by A. G. Bainbridge, veteran stock producer of St. Paul and Minneapolis, will open at the Metropolitan, recently vacated by Paramount Publix after a brief season as its No. 2 film house here.

In full partnership with Bainbridge, according to reports, will be the Erlanger Amusement Enterprises, owners of the lease on the house and which has been "holding the sack" for all the dark weeks that the theatre has had. Through arrangements with Erlanger, the Bainbridge group will also have a chance to present plays from the Shubert, William A. Brady, George Cohan and Brock Pemberton offices.

"Let Us Be Gay," which stacked up big grosses as a film attraction here a few weeks ago, may be the opening show.

Fort Wayne Legalizes Paramount Theatre Sign

Fort Wayne, Ind.—The city council here quickly ended a disagreement between the municipal light company and certain members of the city administration concerning the lighting contract of the new Paramount theatre. When a private electric company obtained the contract there were intimations by the administration that the theatre's new sign was in violation of the city building code and its erection would be stopped.

At its last meeting, which was a special meeting for that particular purpose, the city council passed an ordinance amending a section of the building code by unanimous vote. Under the amendment, it is legal to erect a sign the outer edge of which shall not project, except over a marquise, more than 7 feet over the public highway or sidewalk from the building line, and if hung over any alley, the lower edge shall be at least 18 feet above the grade level. Electric signs hung over a marquise shall not project more than within two feet of the outer edge of such marquise. By the ordinance the new Paramount sign becomes legal. The city building inspector had refused its erection.

Canada Trebles Censor Rate on American Films

Toronto—Antagonism against American pictures, evidenced by proposed investigation of the film business in Canada and probe of the Paramount-Famous Canadian deal, broke out in a new form when an order-in-council was passed by the Ontario government raising the rate on censoring U. S. films to $10. The old rate was $3. The rate on British films was set at $7.

This will prove costly for productions synchronized with discs which have been running 500 feet to the reel. The intimation is that the increased rates will bring an additional $90,000 to the Ontario treasury annually.

Start $1,000,000 Theatre For Fox in Spokane, Wash.

Spokane, Wash.—Work on Spokane's $1,000,000 Fox West Coast theatre has been started at Sprague and Monroe streets, on a site 155 by 200 feet. The land is valued at about $350,000 and furnishings and fixtures will amount to $150,000.

Robert C. Reamer, Seattle architect, designed the new theatre and Whitehouse & Price of Spokane have been named as resident architects in charge of construction. General contract has been awarded to Alloway & George of Spokane.

The theatre which is to be modernistic in style, will embody all of the very latest scientific improvements and will be equipped with the new Grandeur screen. Colored glass will be used in part in the decorative scheme, and will be used by the Fox interests for the first time in their new Spokane showhouse.

7 Theatres for 3 Millions in Iraq, Says Gov't

Washington — Like other neighboring countries, Iraq is greatly underseated and presents doubtful possibilities of American manufacturers furthering their export business in that region. This is the highlight of this week's installment on foreign equipment conditions which appears weekly in Motion Picture News, from reports sent to the Dept. of Commerce by its attaches abroad.

John Randolph, American consul in Bagday, in the following report, discusses theatre and equipment conditions in Iraq:

Iraq is a country with an estimated population of 3,000,000, of whom nearly 2,000,000 are Bedouins pasturing their flocks in the deserts or cultivators living along the river banks. Bagdad has three theatres, Basrah two, and Mosul and Hinaidi one each. Hinaidi is a British military cantonment, and its theatre offers two shows a week only. The theatres in Basrah were closed for over a year because of lack of patronage, but reopened early in the fall of 1929. The theatre in Mosul closes five months during the summer, there being no patronage, and the three theatres in Bagdad are playing to very poor houses and sometimes to empty ones.

Projectors.—There are three different makes of projectors in use in Iraq. The Central Cinema and the Iraq Cinema of Bagdad and the Depot Cinema of Hinaidi cantonment are all equipped with Gaumont projectors; the National Cinema of Bagdad, the Basrah, Cinema of Basrah City, and the Royal Cinema of Ashar, Basrah, are all equipped with Pathé projectors; while the National Cinema of Mosul is equipped with an American projector.

It has been impossible to ascertain the cost price of these different projectors, as all of them are comparatively very old models. The Gaumont projector of the Central Cinema cost, it is understood, in the neighborhood of $725 several years ago. Also, it is understood the owners of the National Cinema in Mosul actually paid for their American projector about $545, but it was purchased secondhand from some one else who had imported it with the idea of opening a theatre and then abandoned the idea and sold the projector.

It is difficult to say what special features made the three above-mentioned projectors appeal to the parties who imported them. The appeal of the American machine was undoubtedly its low price and immediate availability. The appeal of the Gaumont, it is understood, was its good reputation of durability and service.

There are no equipment dealers who might be interested in handling American projectors, as there is no demand for projectors for theatrical uses, nor is there a demand as yet for projectors for non-theatrical uses. Perhaps the demand for projectors for non-theatrical uses will develop as educational methods develop and school equipment is improved. The different theatres in Iraq are each equipped with one projector only.

The projectors in use in this country, as mentioned previously, are all old models. The Gaumont projector of the Central Cinema is about five years old, but was rebuilt two years ago, and a new arc lamp added. The Gaumont projector of the Iraq Cinema is about four years old and was also rebuilt two years ago, and a new arc lamp added. The Gaumont projector of the Depot Cinema at Hinaidi is an old projector rebuilt quite recently.

The Pathé projector of the National Cinema of Bagdad is about six years old, and those of the Basrah Cinema and the Royal Cinema of Ashar, Basrah, are still older.

The American projector of the National Cinema in Mosul is seven years old, but was rebuilt two years ago and a new arc lamp added. It is difficult to say whether or not American projectors are considered to give better service than other makes.

Generators.—The possibilities for the sale of American generator sets for use in theatres in Iraq to convert alternating current to direct current is said to be nil. The Central Cinema of Bagdad, the Iraq Cinema of Bagdad, and the National Cinema of Bagdad all have their own Ruston Hornsby engines producing direct current of 110 volts and 120 amperes. The Depot Cinema at Hinaidi also has its own engine. The Basrah Cinema, the Royal Cinema at Ashar, and the National Cinema at Mosul have generator sets which convert direct current of 220 volts to direct current 110 volts.

Arc Lamps and Screens.—High-intensity and mirror-reflector arc lamps are in use in some theatres in Iraq. The screens in use are cotton cloth. Until recently the Iraq Cinema had a whitewashed wall, but a cotton cloth screen was installed.

Visual Education.—The only visual education attempted in Iraq so far consists of a collection of photographs showing the Arabic or Moorish architecture in Spain, brought in by Saty Beg al Hasri, who is now the head of the High Training College, and a collection of photographs of the works of great painters, brought from Paris by Mrs. Alma Kerr, principal of the Girls' Training College. Projectors and worthwhile educational films might be a great help and will doubtless come in time.

Limited Field For Equipment

Washington—There are but two theatres in the Tabriz consular district, and one of them operates only sporadically, which lines up this market as being inconsequential insofar as possibilities of American companies doing equipment business, according to a report by Augustin W. Ferrin, American consul.

The projectors used by both of these theatres are Pathe and Goerz, for which $200 and $300 was paid. The principal reason for preference of those machines was price.

There are no equipment dealers in Tabriz, but the company operating the main theatre, Ostfilm, with theatres also in Teheran, Pehlevi, and Resht, would be interested in receiving information about American equipment, as no American projectors are in use. Neither of the two theatres has a second projector. The single projector is, in each theatre, of the latest model.

Generators.—No equipment is required for converting alternating into direct current, as the two theatres use direct current created by their own Deutch generators.

Arc Lamps and Screens.—Mirror-reflector arc lamps are used, of Zeiss make. Screens are not employed in projecting pictures, which are thrown on to a wall plastered with white gypsum.

Visual Education.—Visual education has not yet been attempted in purely Persian schools, but the American Presbyterian schools and the Seventh Day Adventist mission use magic lanterns for certain purposes. Recently, also, one of the American missionaries has imported personally a small American machine which she uses somewhat educationally.

Pathe Moves Branch Office

Cleveland—Pathe exchange has moved into its new one-story building at Payne Ave. and East 24th St., immediately adjoining the M-G-M exchange building.

Arabia Out as An Equipment Mart; Has Only 1 House

Washington—American manufacturers interested in marketing abroad are advised to hold up on surveys of Arabia because of the non-existence of a field in that country for theatre apparatus.

In the current installment of equipment conditions in foreign countries, Cloyce K. Huston, American vice consul at Aden, gives the lowdown on Arabia's very limited market. It follows:

The industry in Arabia has not yet become very highly developed; in fact, there is only one public theatre in the whole of Arabia. The one projector there is a fairly recent model Pathé, which was purchased secondhand in India at an undisclosed price. It is presumed that the machine was not selected because of any peculiar features or superior qualities, but because it was available at a greatly reduced price.

Two other projectors are in use of Aden, being employed for weekly showings to exclusive groups of foreign residents. Definite information concerning the projectors used is difficult to obtain, but they are understood likewise to have been purchased in India. Since none of these machines has been subjected to critical demands, they have all proved satisfactory.

As may be surmised, only the crudest arrangements and equipment are used in local showings of pictures. Only one projector is used, high-intensity and mirror-reflector arc lamps are not known, and the screens employed are simply plastered walls, which are occasionally given a coating of whitewash. Generator sets naturally would find no sale at present.

In the field of visual education nothing at all has been done in Arabia. Education throughout the peninsula is either non-existent or in the most elemental stages, the small percentage of those who are literate confining their studies in most cases to reading and writing Arabic and to the Koran. It seems reasonable to say that visual education by means of motion pictures in Arabia belongs to a rather distant future.

Further prospects, rather than the present state of the industry in Arabia, might be of interest to American projector manufacturers. The Arabian peninsula is a vast area containing roughly 5,000,000 inhabitants, an area into which western manufactures, modern conveniences, and new ideas are just now beginning to penetrate. The process of change and development is slow, innovations having a bitter and often a losing struggle with custom, tradition, and long-established habits of life. It seems probable, however, that with continued development and the gradual opening up of the territory to western commerce, even the cinema will find a place in Arab life.

As a distributing center for much of Arabia, as well as for the African Somalilands, Aden is the key to the market. At present there are no dealers in equipment there.

Sound Studio for India

"Promises"

IT'S bad enough that chains run races to see which can acquire the most theatres in the shortest space of time (and at the greatest possible outlay of money); but when the sellers, men who boasted independence for many years, start to "swing the axe" in order that they may add another thousand or two to their already fat bankrolls, then it becomes a calamity.

The history of show business for the past few years is chockfull of instances where, immediately upon the "signing of the papers," the independent fires some of the best and most faithful employees in his outfit.

Why?

Because he got his and will "get the balance" on the day the chain takes over complete control. So every dollar he can cut from the overhead is "just so much saved."

But what of the faithful employees? Where do they come in? What happens to them after their untiring efforts on behalf of these independents? Does the old boss take care of them? Does he make every possible effort to impress the buyers of his theatres that those men are fine showmen and would be a credit to any organization?

Like hell he does.

He gives them "the gate" and sits back until the "day of reckoning," then he'll probably go to Europe for a "much needed rest." Wow. What baloney. What about those faithful employees who plugged like Trojans? Didn't they tell these same faithful employees that if they ever sold their theatres, they would certainly be "taken care of?"

The crime of this procedure is the many excellent men lost to the circuits acquiring the theatres. Those chains ought to use scouts to spot the good men who are let out as soon as the first papers are signed. They would have less manpower-hunting to do and besides they would be getting men who know the houses from beginning to end.

We know all about this "save-the-dough" act. We've seen many a good man, deserving of consideration, listening to his boss tell how he is expecting to sell his houses and that he (the boss) will get a big job with the circuit, and will, of course, take care of the men who were with him so many years. We not only know it, but we've had it told right to us. Pardon our conceit. We were never impressed with the applesauce. We walked out on the guy that gave us that line and subsequent events proved that we were right. He sold. He got his "fat" job. And his "faithful" employees got: "The air."

Campaign Booklet MacLevey Made Up Was A Great Help

Another achievement along the showman lines is the one turned in by Monty MacLevey, of the publicity staff of the Brooklyn and Long Island Division for Fox Theatres, whereby he issued a special booklet to every manager on the circuit that contained, in complete detail, a popularity contest to be used in conjunction with "Greater Show Season."

MacLevey had to do some tall hiking on the contest. He personally went out and tied up a steamship line, obtaining over seven thousand dollars in steamship passages, which were to be distributed to the first prize winners in each house. The girls winning the contest were entitled to go to Miami and return with all expenses paid.

The booklet was well made up, the mimeographed pages being bound in a brown, gold-lettered cardboard cover. The first page carried the introduction and the results to be expected by a careful following out of the lay-out. The rest of the pages enumerated the various ideas to be carried out, such as calibre of entries, photographs, announcements, radio tie-ups (broadcasting), outdoor advertising (ballyhoo), window displays, empty store space, special greetings, merchant co-operation, the voting, newspapers and balloting, tabulation of votes (votes given with the purchase of each ticket), eligibility of contestants, judges, semi-weekly and weekly counting, special meeting of employees, front display portraying the festive atmosphere, marquee display, house organs, credit lines to steamship company and co-operating dealers, screen announcements, badges, trailers, sign work, bill-posters, and every other necessary angle.

As the popularity contest does not close until Oct. 15, it having been started Sept. 15, we cannot, at this time, give you any more dope on it, but keep your eye on the Club pages because when Monty shoots us in the complete dope, with photos, etc., we are sure that you'll have something that will help you to boost business in your town as well as at your house.

Playground Aided Powell In Plugging Show At Theatre

Even the playgrounds were tied up by William T. Powell, manager of the Strand Theatre, in Portland, Maine, when he set out to sell "Animal Crackers" about the city.

He employed a man to carry a huge sign all over the Playgrounds. On this cardboard sign were pasted numerous animal crackers together with lettered copy about the picture, theatre and playdates. The kids giving the nearest correct estimate of the number of crackers on the sign were to receive guest tickets to see the picture. The man carrying the sign also passed out animal crackers in a paper bag; the bag being imprinted with copy relative to the picture.

Powell also used a man on the streets. This man was dressed as Harpo in the picture and created a lot of fun and amusement as well as popularizing the picture.

The man also went in around the playgrounds, lots and other spots where children gathered, as Powell made it a point to plug his kiddie business hard, as he felt he had an attraction that would more than merit it. This is an angle that means something and it would pay you to think over, and perhaps when you get a chance to use it, you'll work it to good advantage.

And then, to show how versatile he is, he tied up "Manslaughter" with a "Save a Life Campaign."

The Governor of Maine was informed by letter of the campaign and his answer was used for publicity purposes.

In preparing newspaper copy, Powell took advantage—in an indirect manner—of various sensational occurrences in Portland during the last two weeks which tied in with the picture very nicely.

Powell also called a number of clubs and societies on the telephone and extended a special invitation to the City Manager and Police Chief, all of which gave the picture publicity.

This is Powell's first contribution to the Club pages, and we feel that now he is going to prove a very active member.

"No Such Thing As Bum Biz. With Me" Says Himmelhoch

If we guess aright it seems to us that the Mickey Mouse Clubs first spring up out on the Coast and since their inception the showmen have been vieing with each other to outdo themselves on new stunts until the mania has spread all over the country. Dave Himmelhoch, of the Coliseum Theatre in Seattle, Oregon, is right out front, leading the field, by reason of the marvelous display of showmanship he evidences every week on his kid clubs.

He has an idea that's worth its weight in gold in the special morning show, given free to the kids at 9:30. Then, at the scheduled afternoon time, he starts his regular show, with different pictures and admits kids at ten cents a head. What a stunt this angle turned out to be! The kids mobbed the theatre at the early show, where they looked at the special picture that Himmelhoch was presenting, then went home, procured their dimes, and returned for the regular. In this manner his kid business has jumped a hundred percent, and the fact that he gives away free ice cream besides doesn't cause him to lose any goodwill, either. He handles all of the advertising and publicity for his house and he makes sure that the Club comes in for plenty of talk.

It was Walt Disney himself who made Himmeloch, Big Chief Mickey Mouse of the Seattle clubbers. Over three thousand kids are enrolled in the organization, and every Saturday Himmelhoch gets upon the stage and delivers a personal spiel to the kids. In the photos we are showing, you can see the crowd of kids, and also note Dave, himself, handing out the bricks of ice cream. The other cut shows the Mickey Mouse Club handshake. These were distributed to all of the members. The sketch was drawn by one of the Club members, a youngster about ten years old. The father of one of the kid members, being an engraver, made up the cut free of charge. Another kid's father, a printer ran off a few thousand for nothing, also. And that's what you call co-operation. Look the heralds over, perhaps you'll want to use them in your own campaign or club activities. You'll admit that there's plenty of life to the stunt and it's a sure thing that no kid can resist them; with the possibility of the adult sneaking one or two in his pocket.

Listen Dave, when you turn out work like this, we know that the rest of the world's best showmen want to look at it, so we'd like you to keep us posted on your activities because there's bound to be one or two stunts that we can pass along which will be of value. Right?

PERLBERG IN "CHI"!

To those of you who have been wondering where Jonas Perlberg went after leaving the Florida Theatre in Jacksonville, Fla., the information that he has traded the balmy Southern breezes for the winds of the Great Lakes will come as a surprise.

Perlberg is now managing the Englewood Theatre for the RKO outfit in Chicago, Ill. Quite a racketeer himself—from a publicity standpoint—Perlberg looks set to do some pretty work. We want to wish him plenty of luck on his new venture and we are sure that he is going to keep us supplied with what's going on around his district.

Burton Jones Ties Up with Merchants Whenever He Can

Out in Beatrice, Neb., the local merchants celebrate an event that they call "Window Opening Night," and whenever this occasion rolls around all the natives are attracted downtown. This gives Burton Jones, manager of the Rivoli Theatre an opportunity to sell his show direct, and he makes sure that he does.

On the last "Window Opening Night" he happened to be playing "All Quiet," so he felt that the film had to be brought to the attention of every one in the town. His first move was to use a 15-piece jazz band on the marquee of the theatre. The music attracted no end of attention and brought many people to the lobby, where Jones clinched his sales with a corking good lobby display.

The picture was billed in 14 towns surrounding Beatrice with block one-sheets and window cards. Two hundred (200) cardboard arrows reading "All roads lead to ALL QUIET ON THE WESTERN FRONT at the Rivoli Theatre, Beatrice, now!" were tacked on stakes and fences along the principal highways leading into the city.

A compo board book, 12 feet high and 8 feet wide, with a jacket illustrated with a cut-out head taken from the 24-sheet poster, was stationed in the foyer of the theatre two weeks in advance and moved to the marquee during the run of the film.

As an advance plug for the picture, the house attaches wore printed silk badges advertising the film in the theatre 18 days in advance of its opening date. These activities resulted in an added increase at the box-office and, as this was what Jones wanted, he was more than satisfied.

Larkin's Display In Window Set The Town To Laughing

A window display that occasioned plenty of hilarity and one that was right in keeping with Fred Larkin's showmanship was used by him to get in a plug for "Animal Crackers" when it played at the State Theatre in Sioux Falls, S. D.

The furniture store window showed a bed with apparently a dummy under the covers with just the head protruding outside. At the foot of the bed and leaning against the wall was a cardboard with the following copy: "I Have Gone to Bed to Rest Up to Gather All My Strength So I Can Laugh Heartily at the 4 Marx Bros," etc. This display was on exhibit for a week in advance and during most of run of picture.

A similar display as appeared in the furniture store window was on exhibition in the lobby of the Orpheum Theatre, a Publix house. This was put there primarily to possibly urge a certain class of people to see the picture who ordinarily do not attend the State Theatre.

Larkin also had a dummy sitting on a pole atop the canopy. A sign underneath the dummy read: "I refuse to come down until Ma says I can see ANIMAL CRACKERS."

This sort of gag is the kind that Sioux Falls thrives on, and Larkin uses it whenever he can. But don't get the idea that there isn't plenty of variety in his work, too. What showman doesn't know how "to mix 'em up." And, by the way, Fred, when you send us in your next effort, mix up a photo of yourself with it, will you?

Try Stretching a Tennis Net Across Street for Stunt

Here's one from that wide-awake showman, G. E. O'Donnell, of the Columbia Theatre in Baton Rouge, La., that will help you to put your shows before the public if local conditions permit your using it.

When he played "Manslaughter" he stretched two tennis net signs across the street from pole to pole.

The tennis net contained the red cut-out letters spelling out the title of the picture and were stretched across the street at two of the city's main business thoroughfares.

Special permission was given by the Mayor to put up these tennis net signs, which attracted a great deal of attention.

In addition to this, about six or seven "No Parking Signs" were lettered "Manslaughter—Drive Carefully" and placed at busy street corners.

These two stunts tended to enhance the effectiveness of the campaign. We'd like to point out that these angles can be used on almost any film you are playing, and even if you don't care to use them now, file them away so that you'll have them when you need them.

The card, printed in black on pink stock, was folded to resemble a four-page booklet. The first page carried the regular uniform school program with spaces left for period, room, subject and teacher. One of the inner pages carried the theatre copy, which we are reprinting so that you can act upon the various angles that Burns is using, in case you can find a spot for them.

The rest of the pages carried plugs on the dealers whose ads permitted the printing of the herald. The local stationery store dealer bought 75 tickets and placed them in the books that were sold. The stunt made quite a hit with the kids and they flocked to the store to purchase their school supplies.

Here's one that can be a winner for you, too. If you are too late this season to take advantage of it, use it on the next term. We want to thank Mr. Burns for letting us have this one and we hope he will keep us posted on his future work.

A PRESS BOOK THAT HELPS!

Another feather in Johnny Moynahan's cap.—That's our opinion of the "Amos 'N' Andy" exploitation and press book which jjust reached our desk with the printer's ink still wet.

From cover to cover you will find this great showman's assistant crammed full of smashing ad layouts, suitable for the main stem or the sticks. Plenty of variety, sensibly planned to allow for alteration to fit individual situations and condition.

National tie-ups, all ready and waiting for the live-wire showmen to take advantage of. Front displays, lobby layouts, cutout, banners, letters,—in fact, if anything has been left out or overlooked we'll be surprised—and then some.

It's a dirty trick to play on the brains who conceived and executed this unusual piece of work, but we must admit that whether you are playing the picture or not, you should have a copy of that "Amos 'N' Andy" Press Book on your desk.

Thomas J. Simmons Joins; He Is Going To Be Very Active

Industriously engaged in laying out his campaigns, as the photo shows, Thomas J. Simmons, manager of the Rialto Theatre in Morrilton, Arkansas, nevertheless managed to shoot us in a couple of stunts along with his application for membership in the Managers' Round Table Club.

Simmons is another of those Arkansas live-wires whose work is known in the many towns surrounding his location. One of the things that he takes especial pride in is his newspaper advertising and he always tries to so localize his copy that he can sell them by this medium, alone. He is also proficient in the art of making up heralds and we notice in one of his recent heralds on "The Unholy Three" that he jacked up the price for the showing of the film. A footnote on the bottom of the herald read: "WE DO NOT APOLOGIZE—for the slight increase in prices, due to the mammoth cost in bringing this super production to Morrilton to you." The gag was very effective. The herald itself was well done also. It was headed by a catchline: "Have you ever heard Lon Chaney Swear?"—(underneath in smaller type were the words: "He Did—Before a Notary Public in Los Angeles.") An arrow then pointed to a fac-simile of the notary statement that Chaney signed in California. The rest of the herald was devoted to a cut of Chaney and selling copy.

Simmons sent along a number of ads and a few more heralds to show us that he is hitting the right road to becoming an active contributor. We want to welcome him into the Club and we look forward to hearing from him soon concerning his future work.

"DIRTY BULBS"

Talking about keeping your theatre in tip-top shape brings to mind the thought that you ought to devote a morning or afternoon to cleaning all the electric bulbs on the outside of the theatre.

Maximum brilliancy can never be attained from your signs if the bulbs are coated with a winter's dirt and soot. And while discussing this subject, may we inquire when you last walked out of the theatre, on an evening, to the opposite side of the street to look over the front of your house?

We suggest you develop the habit. In fact, it's worth doing several times a week, just to get the patron's slant on what the front of the house looks like. Is it inviting? Are there a majority of lamps not burning? Perhaps the letters of your theatre's name sign is sadly in need of a coat of white paint. Maybe the attraction letters could stand a good cleaning (despite your weekly inspection).

These represent but a few of the angles that every wide-awake showman should make it a point to watch. Whatever else you may do, DON'T wait for one of your bosses to tell you that your theatre looks like a "dump." Such news generally spoils your appetite for dinner and jars the nerves.

Dowling Decked Out Girls In Deck of Cards As Ballyhoo

A novel ballyhoo was used by E. M. Dowling to plug his showing of "Queen High" at the Broadway Theatre in Newburgh, N. Y., when he secured the services of a girl to plug the film.

The girl was dressed in a playing card costume and worked behind a table in the lobby. A pack of cards lay on the table and a card alongside carried copy to the effect that persons cutting a Queen would receive a guest ticket to see the picture. She also worked on the street in the off hours—carrying a sign on her back advertising the picture, theatre and playdates.

Listen, "E. M."! We know that there's some good showmanship going on around your town and we want to see some more of it. And, by the way, when you send us in your next contribution, include your photo with it, will you?

The "Judge" Crashed Hub Newspaper For Some Free Publicity

Showman ingenuity has devised many ways in which to secure space in newspapers; and the gag used by "Judge" Saef to land a photo plugging the Uptown and Olympia theatres in Boston, Mass., on the classified page of one of the Hub dailies was right in line with the best.

Saef wanted to secure some black crows to place in the lobby as a plug for the Moran and Mack (Two Black Crows) film. He inserted an ad in the classified section. The ad was inexpensive. Results were so good that Saef sought out the advertising manager and showed him how and why he should get a plug. The advertising manager consented to run a picture showing the crows in the lobby of the theatre. Underneath the picture, the copy read: "The Uptown and Olympia theatres wanted live black crows for publicity purposes in conjunction with the "Two Black Crows" showing this week. A classified ad in the Boston Evening American procured the desired results as evidenced by this picture."

Smart showmanship? And that's not all that Saef is doing in Boston. He has just joined the Club and we judge from his first contribution that he is certainly going to be a live-wire. Keep it up, "Judge," and when you send in your next include your photo and a little dope on yourself so that we can have you meet the rest of the show world.

Simplicity Forms The Keynote For These Art Displays

Remember the special "Dawn Patrol" front that Ralph Noble of the Arkansas Amusement Corp. passed along recently? Well, here's a couple of more samples of the art work turned out by Noble and the live-wires who make up his organization.

The photos are inadequate to do full justice to the display, as the many striking colors worked in it helped enhance the effectiveness considerably. Cut-out letters and heads were used against a black oil cloth background. You will notice, by studying the photos closely, that the entire display is carried out in the tone; it does not shift from one angle to another. The thing that Noble wants to convey is the fact that the Marx Brothers are playing in "Animal Crackers." He seems to know his town, and also knows that they in turn are acquainted with the Marx Brothers. He omits all other copy. Then again, he may be experimenting. There is no question but that the simplicity of this display packs a powerful wallop.

If you will take the time to look it over carefully we are sure that you will be able to pick up one or two pointers, that you can work into your own displays. At any rate, there's plenty to dope out along this angle. How about your display work? Do you figure in the movie stars who happen to be favorites in the town? Do you know whether simplicity or ostentatiousness in display will help or hinder the business? Does novelty help? These and many other questions of like nature have been thought over by showmen who know their business.

Before closing this little story we'd like to inform you that the sign on the side of the building measured 23 feet in width and 21 feet in height. It created a very effective flash. This sign is used for every new attraction. Oke, Ralph; thanks for letting us see this. And remember, we look forward to seeing some more.

The Strand Opening In Pocatello, Idaho, Was Well Executed

Through the kindness of R. E. Archibald, manager of the Orpheum Theatre in Pocatello, Idaho, we are enabled to show these photos of the opening of the Strand Theatre in his town.

The photo on the left will give you a small idea of the immense crowd that lined up for the opening performance which was given as a "Gala Opening," the house having been dark for six weeks while refurnishing went on within. Preceding the opening of the box-office, the National Guard cavalry unit, consisting of 40 mounted men, stationed in town, paraded through the downtown streets and went through a series of maneuvers and drills on the side street next to the theatre for a half hour preceding the opening. While the drill was in progress, the theatre lights were extinguished, and, at the completion of the drill, the men stood at attention, sabres drawn, as a firing squad shot a five-round volley. The volley was the signal for the throwing of the switch in the theatre and the house lights came on in full blast. In 20 minutes the house was sold out.

In conjunction with this article we are also showing a picture of the lobby display constructed for the opening picture, "All Quiet on the Western Front." The scenes from the film were painted on sign cloth, and this angle, together with the cut-outs and the war equipment (which was promoted from the local American Legion) combined to form an effective selling display. Barb wire entanglements and cement bags filled with saw dust served to enhance the effectiveness and realistic tone of the battle front.

Thanks, "R. E.," for passing this along to us so that your fellow members in the Club can see that you, live-wire out in Idaho, aren't letting any grass grow under your feet. Keep up the good work and let's have some more accounts of how you and you fellow managers are keeping them coming up to the box-office.

Newspaper and Cops Helped Rose Put "Manslaughter" Over

It takes a popular showman to sell both the newspaper and the police department at the same time. Still Walter Rose, manager of the Strand Theatre in Boston, Mass., called in the gentlemen of the Fourth Estate and the Blue Coats to assist him in putting over his show.

An advance newspaper article read, "Due to the merchants and Publix Theatres sponsoring Fall Trade Week on this same week, and due to the fact that this week will bring many out-of-town shoppers to Brockton, this is an ideal time to warn motorists of the dangers before them."

The news article further read: "Not only careless and reckless drivers will be watched, but the motorcycle squad of the police department will be on the lookout for careful drivers as well, and will present each careful driver with two tickets to the Strand Theatre to see MANSLAUGHTER, in which there is an example of what results reckless driving may bring."

ARMISTICE DAY!

Armistice Day rolls around on November 11, bringing with it an opportunity for you to tie up your local American Legion or National Guard to good advantage.

Nearly every showman, of course, will run a special trailer. But there's a couple of other angles that will also help to bring home the special day. Perhaps you can persuade the National Guard or Legionaires to stage a parade to your house and then have a picked team give a demonstration of the manual of arms, either in front of the house or on the stage. A bugler can sound taps from your marquee at the time set by the President for the two or three minutes silent observance. You can write a special editorial and send it to your local newspaper. There are any number of dignified ways in which you can show that your theatre is right there with patriotism.

"No Accident Week" started on Labor Day, the opening date of "Manslaughter" at the Strand. A big headline in Tuesday's paper, "Many Accidents in City Over Holiday," sort of put a crimp in the "No Accident Week." As the news article stated, "NO ACCIDENT WEEK in Brockton started off with a bang over the week-end and holiday the wrong way." However, that only served to give the stunt further publicity and make other drivers that much more careful.

In spite of the many minor accidents at the beginning of the week, the motorcycle squad found many careful drivers who in turn received tickets—these tickets being in the form of a theatre guest ticket to see "Manslaughter."

Much publicity was derived from the stunt—both from a good-will standpoint and a direct medium in plugging the picture.

Rose has secured plenty of good-will since he has been at the house, and those of you members who remember his many benefit shows will agree with us. Listen, Walter! How about keeping in touch with us more often? You know you should have your work passed along frequently so that your fellow members and showmen on the Publix circuit can keep posted on your activity.

Charles F. Burns Is Active Among Brooklyn Showmen

In Brooklyn, out around the Bedford section, Charles F. Burns, manager of the Brevoort, is treating the residents of the neighborhood to some live-wire showmanship.

The Brevoort, being a Loew house, it is featuring the special "You'll Remember September" Month, and in order to plug this special feature, Brown did some fast hustling. He had his printer make up a special card on which was imprinted copy relative to the pictures coming to the theatre during the month. The card was headed by a large "Thank You," and was passed out to the patrons by the cashier when she was not too busy.

Another angle that went over well and proved to be one of the highlights of the campaign was a tie-up made with the local merchants on a memory contest. Special four-page heralds were made up. The front pages carried the catchline "You'll Remember September." The inner pages carried the details of the contest and the list of names of the merchants participating in it. The store-keepers paid for the printing of the heralds, supplied the gifts and also permitted the use of their windows for displays. Mats of scenes from former films were used with a line underneath for the contestant to write in the name of the picture.

We would like you to know that this is the first contribution that Mr. Burns has made to the Club pages, and when he starts off his membership like this, it seems to us that he is going to be an active member. We hope that when he sends us in his next contribution he will also include his photo, as we want to give him a regular introduction to his fellow Club members.

KIDDIE BUSINESS—AND HOW!

By PAUL W. KUNZE

Your issue of Aug. 2 contains a very interesting and vital article by Madaline Woods, advertising director for Publix, on the subject of Boosting Kid Patronage. The story brings forth the serious situation which is facing the industry in the very apparent loss of juvenile patronage due to the lack of appeal to them of the "new show world pictures" otherwise known as "Talkies." It also suggests remedies in the way of various features especially arranged for the young folks.

Excellent Material

The story as presented contains some excellent material, which if generally used should do a lot toward helping the situation. The deplorable part of the condition is that, although it has been really serious for some time, exhibitors and the chains have only recently realized it and are now faced with the added difficulty of bringing back this once lucrative and valuable patronage. The idea of a theatre Kiddies' Club is perhaps the best, surest and most practical arrangement, and while these clubs are now quite numerous, we believe that in our State Theatre Kiddies' Club organization we have certain features which are really tremendous in their good-will producing possibilities and which are not being used generally. It is for this reason that I am submitting the details of its operation to supplement the WOODS material and facilitate matters for some other managers who may be passing up a real good bet in not using a feature of this type. We have found the Club idea possibilities tremendous and only limited by one's own effort. The importance of getting at the adults and building up parents' goodwill cannot be overestimated, not to mention the extra box office revenue and advertising value of an enthusiastic Club membership. We have found our Saturday business has kept right up to winter grosses all during the hot weather and general slump, directly traceable to interest in the Kiddies' Club.

Every Kid in Town

The State Theatre Kiddies' Club was started eight months ago with a small membership when it became apparent that we were losing favor with the kids. It has built up to a point where nearly every eligible youngster in town is a member and booster, and there is a weekly increase, this coming from surrounding towns as a result of activity and word of mouth advertising.

The Club is in charge of and under supervision of a young lady designated as "Big Sister," a trained kindergartner and teacher. Being connected with our staff, she takes a personal interest in the children and the extra cost of services is negligible. She interviews the youngsters and accepts members at a desk located in the foyer every Saturday afternoon. Each member receives a numbered card, which is kept on record and a bright red button signifying membership which they are urged to wear at all times. There is no charge for membership, but the renewal of lost pins costs the member a penny. A record of all names, addresses, ages, birthdays and numbers is kept accurately. It is noticeable that youngsters take it very seriously, talk freely to "Big Sister," ask advice and help in various things.

Saturday afternoon is entirely devoted to the kids with the theatre organist located at a piano in the foyer playing their request numbers for them, during the preliminaries before the show.

Stage Angles Stressed

The Kiddies' Club stage show comes at the end of the regular picture program on Saturday afternoon, so spotted in order that adults and older children who may not care to remain may leave. We find that most of the older folks take a keen interest in the activities of the children and do really enjoy the proceedings. The stage show is in charge of a male master of ceremonies who has gained much popularity with the kiddies, and is employed especially for this presentation. He is assisted on the stage by one young lady in charge of the club. Having this supervision, makes the parents feel that their children are in capable hands and properly cared for, which is, of course, a fact.

IF YOU still think that kiddie business is tough to get, just read how Paul W. Kunze, manager of the State Theatre in Stoughton, Mass. turns the trick.

Kiddie Klubs in theatres have always clicked if handled right, but add to the Klub angle the slants which Kunze found so valuable and you have an almost "sure thing."

We also suggest that you refer back to the issue of August 2nd and read what Madeline Woods had to say on the same subject. Combining the two you should experience little difficulty in putting the same ideas over in your own theatre.

Kiddie trade is too tempting and lucrative to pass over lightly. Many a seasoned showman will tell you that if you get the kids you automatically get the adults.

We are grateful to Mr. Kunze for complying with our request for this article and we feel that it will prove of immense value to many others.

"CHICK"

We open the stage show with the singing of "America" by the entire club, dressed up by a display of flags on the screen, children on each side of stage in patriotic costume bearing the colors. To vary this opening we have a specially written song for the Kiddies' Club to the tune of a current popular number. Next comes a Kiddies' Club cheer by the group. These suggested openings are naturally only a beginning of the possibilities which showmen can arrange; however, the patriotic element is in line with school training and always popular with kids.

Usually this is followed by announcements of next week's features, contests and attractions. Our stage programs and activities started in by occupying 15 minutes' time and have so built up that nearly an hour is allotted to the entertainment and exploitation of the club members.

Following the opening ceremonies comes the Lucky Names, when 50 boys and girls are called by name from the list of members, are required to come on the stage and receive a gift either candy bars or some novelty trinket. In the case of candy bars we have several contacts with distributors of popular 5c bars whereby they are supplied us free of charge for the advertising. As for the novelty gifts, they are purchased and cost us between three and six cents each. We believe in getting as many kids on the stage as possible to maintain their interest at a high pitch, and also to give away as much as possible without going to any great expense. This all creates plenty of talk which in turn builds up lasting goodwill at a minimum of expense.

Furnish Own Talent

The feature I mention as having tremendous institutional possibilities and which has as yet been generally neglected is our policy of selecting 10 or a dozen children from among the membership who can sing, dance, recite, play musical instruments or otherwise entertain and using them as part of our Kiddies' Club stage show. Any child who can entertain is invited to come on the stage and do so, and our list is now so that they are booked way in advance. Some appear in costumes, others street clothes, many prepare their bits at home and others who may wish it are instructed and coached by the young lady in charge of the club. She rehearses and teaches the children stage deportment and otherwise encourages their particular talents, which naturally makes a big hit with the parents. For this feature the stage is appropriately dressed with stage piano and organist is used to accompany the entertainers on the stage. Each child who entertains is rewarded with a gift of candy, and at the conclusion all entertainers are judged and the winners rewarded with capital prizes, in some cases bought or promoted by us.

We are very fortunate in having contacts with several local merchants who are in sympathy with our activities (and also appreciate the advertising), so there seems to to be no difficulty in obtaining any desired quantity of merchandise for use as gifts.

As an additional warm weather feature we interested two ice cream manufacturers in the possibilities of exploiting their product via the Kiddies' Club with the result that

L. Simon Designed Special Display In Lobby For Picture

It is not only on prison films that Louis Simon designs special lobbies for his house but on all of them. However, his specialty is the prison ones, and this may be seen in the cut we are showing which portrays the lobby of the Stone Theatre in Brooklyn, N. Y., when Simon played "The Convict's Code."

The entire lobby was carried out in the prison tone with the effectiveness of the display being enhanced by the electric chair which was placed in the lobby. Special posters were also created for the picture's run. An angle that had them talking was the beaverboard portraits over the entrance doors. They stood and gaped at these just about as much as at the electric chair. The art work was carried out in a gray tone.

We understand that Simon is displaying work of this sort with every new attraction that plays his house and we hope that in view of the fact the work is "aces up," he is going to keep us posted on the other things he does to keep them coming.

JOHN MATTHEWS BACK!

His many friends will be glad to know that John Matthews, formerly manager of the Ritz Theatre, in New Jersey for the Warner outfit, and lately for R-K-O, has again joined the Radio-Keith outfit and may be found at the Hippodrome Theatre in New York City. Good luck, John.

Covered Wagon Was Used by Powell to Exploit His Show

The covered wagon cavalcade may have gone west, but Ray V. Powell, manager of the Tudor Theatre in New Orleans, La., had them turn South when he decided to use a covered wagon to exploit his showing of "The Last of the Duanes."

The cover of the wagon was entirely white in color and bore copy about the picture, theatre and playdates. The man driving the wagon was rigged out in a costume consistent with the time and day of picture. The covered wagon was used in the business district of the city—and attracted loads of attention and made mighty fine advertising for the picture.

Another angle that Powell used—this being a good-will plug—will probably interest a good many of our members.

Golf putting is still popular in New Orleans. In view of this fact, Powell had installed in the lobby a "One-hole putt-putt course." There is one hazard on this one-hole course—and all those making a hole in one were entitled to receive a guest ticket to see the picture. Advertising copy on the picture was planted on the hazard which made an excellent location to advertise the coming attraction.

So you see, this showman is right there when it comes to activity. It is said about him that he doesn't miss a trick to publicize his house. Well, Ray, you can prove this statement to the rest of the Club also by keeping us in touch with all the latest developments down your way.

KIDDIE BUSINESS

on alternate weeks each furnishes every club member with a 5-cent box of ice cream, given them as they leave for home. It is unnecessary to elaborate on the popularity of this idea with the children. For the winter months we have already arranged a tie-up with a candy distributor under a similar arrangement.

Broadcasting and Games

Further along the line of child entertainers, we are making arrangements to have a group of our best performers broadcast from a local station, which should build up interest considerably for us.

Among the other features of the stage show are games, contests and exhibitions especially arranged for the children.

Along this line, we have used and found excellent the following list of ideas adapted for club use:

1. Pin the tail on the Donkey game, where separate groups of boys and girls are blindfolded on stage and required to pin tail nearest its logical location on donkey. Prizes to first and second.

2. Spelling bee, conducted on stage through co-operation of schools and teachers for a period of four or five weeks using 25 children each week and spelling them down for finals.

3. Movie Star Contest and Parade. Kids come dressed as any movie star they choose, parade around theatre and stage and receive prizes for best, funniest, most original, for both boys and girls. Out of entire costumed group entertainers may be picked to build up excellent stage picture and show.

4. Doughnut, apple or pie-eating contest for boys and girls, youngsters required to eat doughnuts, etc. Prizes for boys and girls for fastest work. Plenty of fun and audience in uproar.

5. Personal appearance of youthful juvenile endurance boxers—three-round exhibition bout staged with atmosphere, etc.

6. Address by Chief of Police, Fire Chief, Board of Health to children on safety and health promotion ideas. Used occasionally so kids will not tire. Monthly fire drill under supervision of Fire Chief, same as employed in schools.

7. Staging of drills, playlets, rhythm work under direction of and rehearsed by "Big Sister," who prepares plays and instructs children after school hours in preparation for presentations on Saturday afternoons. Suitable and excellent simple playlets may be secured free. Excellent training and education for children results from our expert supervision.

8. Girls' doll show with prizes for best of all types dolls, and any number of varied "eating" contests have been tried with good results. Each week a contest of some description or other is included in the program on the stage with long lines of enthusiastic kiddies waiting at the close to enter for whatever may take place the following Saturday.

9. From our membership list we obtain birthdays of children and every Saturday all children whose birthdays occurred during the week are called on stage and presented a suitable gift and given best wishes by club sponsor.

10. Photos were taken of entire membership in front of theatre and photographer offered them for sale to kiddies at nominal fee. Excellent response was received from newspapers in the matter of publishing pictures and stories of the club activities as the large number of children involved made it good business for the papers to use the stuff.

11. Occasionally we stage a new member drive with prizes or gifts for each present member who brings in a new member.

12. We have conducted two Boy Scout shows with theatre service turned over to operation by scouts, Boy Scouts, as part of club meeting, entertained with signals, drills and other scout business, followed by a talk by local Scout Master. This is used as one unit only in the Kiddies' Club Stage Show and is a particular delight to the boys.

13. We are especially well situated to conduct the story telling features and talks on children's books, etc., due to the conduct of the Club by the young lady trained in that line of work.

14. Formation of Harmonica Band and soloists, etc., with possibilities for broadcasting and appearances weekly on the stage. Any activity with large groups of children taking part on stage is beneficial and we never miss an opportunity.

15. During the past spring we had arrangements with local dancing teachers whereby pupils performed as part of our stage show, in costumes, solos and groups. Dancing teachers go big for the idea for the advertising and stage experience it gives the pupils. This is a very valuable angle and we shall certainly renew it in the fall.

16. Another suggestion that worked out well was a Poverty Party and Comedy Clothes party with the kids all dressed in ridiculous costumes, paraded on the stage and suitable prizes for various types, funniest, best, most ragged, etc.

Tremendous Possibilities

The above list gives a mild idea of the possibilities of the stage entertainment and contest angles, of which there are hundreds, all practically at no cost to theatre and rich in good, clean fun for both audience and participants. We are constantly on the lookout for gags which can be built up into fun-producing features for our Kiddies' Club. Managers will find themselves well rewarded for the extra effort required by this type of thing.

Naturally, the entertainment feature brings out the parents, relatives, friends, etc., of the performing children and serves as an additional draw for the program.

Community singing of specially written Club songs, current popular songs and children's songs plays an important part of every meeting, with very enthusiastic response. In line with the singing idea, we are now rehearsing a Kiddies' Glee Club, made up of 30 mixed voices, under direction of music teacher from the schools, and expect to have this as a regular weekly attraction on Saturdays. The School department co-operates freely with us in all activities which involve the children and any features which have educational angles.

The Club meeting is closed with the singing of a lively tune by the entire audience—and they sure do sing.

I hope you will be able to present some of these suggestions to other theatre managers in some way or other, as we have had marvelous reaction at practically no cost. While the operation of the Kiddies' Club is made to order for towns of all sizes and neighborhood houses, it can be varied and used in many types of houses. Exhibitors will find it easy to operate once it is started, just naturally builds itself up big, and creates an unlimited amount of good-will as well as a box-office magnet for Saturdays. Personally I enjoy the Club proceedings very much and feel well rewarded for the extra trouble by the enthusiasm of the kiddies.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

FOOTBALL SEASON IS HERE!

Judging from the many inquiries coming into Club headquarters about Football tie-ups, etc., we are afraid that many showmen have neglected a mighty valuable angle for added business.

It is, however, still early enough in the season to capitalize on this popular sport and we urge every manager to get set NOW.

Among the many slants which come to mind as we write this reminder are: co-operative arrangement with the local high schools or football teams, wereby the theatre furnishes the team line-ups and score cards, carrying, of course, their plug for some current attraction or some good institutional copy.

Another suggestion is the personal appearance of the local team on your theatre's stage on a gala "Foothall Night." This was worked with tremendous success in quite a few spots last fall and resulted in much profitable business and good-will. If possible, get some movie shots of the team in action, close-ups of them and the coach, as well as other officials of the team or school.

Reference to last fall's Club pages will reveal several good campaigns which you can use as a guide for this season. But however you go about it, you should certainly manage to work out something along these lines.

If you have already started on some good football exploitation and tie-ups, pass along the details so that we may publish them while they are still "hot."

Perhaps You Will Want To Use This For Your Theatre

Here's one that will interest you. Get a load of how Roy L. Smart, manager of the Broadhurst Theatre in High Point, N. C., made a dollar bill work overtime to plug his film, "Let's Go Native."

After making the necessary arrangements with the newspaper, banker and the merchants' association, Smart had Jack Oakie send a wire to the banker, the wire reading, "Sending you one dollar with which to inaugurate High Point merchants' association's native dollar movement. Appreciate naming this after LET'S GO NATIVE, my newest comedy. Full speed to native dollar. May abundance of prosperity and joy follow it on its speeding rounds.—Jack Oakie."

The wire, together with a story, was given to the newspaper for publication Sunday. On Monday morning the banker presented the Jack Oakie native dollar to the president of the merchants' association who placed it in circulation by making a purchase at a men's clothing store.

The dollar was attached to a sheet of paper explaining the purpose of it. (Jack Oakie, star of the big comedy hit LET'S GO NATIVE sends this Native Dollar to prove what one dollar will do when kept busy. Sign your name and pass it on quickly to some High Point merchant, firm or individual. Every time it is spent, someone profits. Move it now. The person holding it at 5:30 P. M. each day is requested to telephone 4244 so that an accurate record can be kept. Watch the Enterprise for the accomplishments of this Native dollar. And, for Fun's sake, see LET'S GO NATIVE at the Broadhurst, Friday and Saturday.)

The entire sheet accompanying the dollar bill was then placed in a leather case under a transparent cover with sheets of paper fastened to the back for the signatures of those receiving the dollar. Its progress was slow on the first day, but it increased on the second day and maintained a rapid rate throughout the week.

No trouble was had in locating the dollar each afternoon. Each afternoon the dollar was sent for, the names were copied from the list and then a story was written for publication the following day—the newspaper giving the native dollar's rounds for the day and returning the dollar to the one holding it last. Several concerns offered $1.50 in merchandise for the native dollar which further helped to circulate it among the merchants.

Everybody had a gay old time reading about the travels of the Native Dollar and we'd like to point out that you, too, can use this stunt. Think it over and if it will fit in with your local conditions, make use of it when you get the opportunity. Thanks, Roy, for passing this along. Let's have some more.

D. McSweeney Has Done Much Towards Good-Will Of House

The "Needham Natator" was the cognomen bestowed upon David C. McSweeney, last summer by the residents of Needham, Mass., in recognition of the splendid goodwill he contacted by means of the Needham Paramount Theatre Swimming Club, which he inaugurated as a plug for his kiddie business.

From the time he first entered upon his duties in Needham, this popular showman-manager has clicked with a string of successes. The swimming club, which was a follow-up of his Kiddie Club, was his best summer bet in a long time. On certain afternoons the kids would meet McSweeney at the beach and there receive instructions in swimming, play games, and listen to a short talk about the coming attractions at the theatre. The club met with favor also from the adults, who were very much pleased to see that their kids were so well taken care of.

Another angle that McSweeney had introduced in the town is that of weekly broadcasting, with those kid members of the Club, who possessed exceptional talent, furnishing the entertainment. McSweeney himself takes a hand and strums a uke; and from what we understand he sure gurgles a wicked boop-poop-a-doop. It is also interesting to note that he is well thought of by the newspapers and the local merchants, a fact which may be accounted for by the activity he displayed in treating the town to a "Fall Trade Week." Plenty of pep went into this one, and if you'll look at the ad we are reproducing, you can get a few angles on a stunt of this sort. McSweeney received the full co-operation of the Chamber of Commerce and the newspaper on this stunt and the mediums enabled him to turn in a record breaking week of good-will and business. We would like to mention that if you are in a position to do so, a week of this sort, if properly handled, will prove to be a winner for you, too.

Thanks, Dave, for shooting this along to us so that we could let your fellow-members in on what you are doing; and by the way, when you send in your next contribution, let's have a photo of yourself.

TOP NOTCH DISPLAYS FROM LABY

We don't know who it is handles the brush for the execution of the plans that George Laby, manager of the Olympia Theatre in Boston, Mass. lays out for his lobby displays, but it is certainly fine work, and seems to be carried down to the minutest details.

As a number of our members have requested us to publish some more of these lobby displays and front art work, we are passing along these few for "All Quiet" and "Big Boy." Look them over carefully and we think that you'll find any number of slants contained in them which will help you when you are planning your art work.

A great deal of comment was occasioned by the "All Quiet" display and it is said that its effectiveness was such that it proved to be one of the strongest factors in the campaign, every patron of the theatre the week prior to the picture's opening returning to see it. We would also like to call your attention to the gag in the front photo showing a display for "Big Boy." The scale, placed out front, was used by many persons. Weight was free, and free admission was given to any person tipping the scale at 210 pounds. To make a play for the feminine good-will. Laby offered free tickets to any two ladies who could tip the beam at exactly 210. This gag helped to boost up the good-will stock of the house a great deal, and it's a cinch that it had them talking.

REAL CLUB SPIRIT!

We hate getting "slushy" over any member in particular or the Club in general, but we must take these means of expressing our appreciation to all of those members who "come through" with the requested material for the "Exploitation" series now running on the Club pages.

This is but one of the many instances where we sent out an S O S and found the boys right behind us. It is what we have often referred to as "Club Spirit" and it clearly demonstrates the value of "All For One And One For All" slogan.

It is really remarkable that in the short space of about two years so many thousand showmen from all over the world have adopted this great medium of inter-communication in order that they may better acquaint themselves with what is new in show-selling and theatre management.

And it did prove that they were ripe for an organization like ours. That is why we are constantly striving to make the Club, and our pages in Motion Picture News, always interesting and newsy, besides fulfilling the more important task of telling you HOW to improve your exploitation as well as the running of your theatre.

Great things are in the working for making the Managers' Round Table Club an even greater factor in show-business than it is now. But it will be accomplished only by the continued backing of our host of members and readers.

Wherever you go, whomever you talk to, at every chance that presents itself, let's all broadcast the fact that we are members of the greatest organization of its kind.

Paramount Opening Was Successfully Engineered By Hands

It was an occasion for great rejoicing on the part of the residents, and business organizations of Texarkana, Texas, when the Paramount Theatre opened there recently. And they had all the more cause for joy because E. B. Hands, Jr., new manager of the house, turned out a complete and very showmanlike campaign along with it, in which all of the merchants and city luminaries participated.

On opening day of the theatre, a band was secured to lead a parade of automobile dealers; the dealers carrying co-operative copy on their cars which served to impress people with the new Publix theatre. Practically every merchant had some form of a co-operative window display while some of them permitted Manager Hands to water-color the windows with copy about the opening, attraction, etc.

A platform was built on top of the marquee underneath the theatre sign. This was used by the Mayor and President of the Chamber of Commerce when they addressed the crowd on the afternoon of the opening day of the picture. The platform on the marquee was also used in the evening for two hours by the leader of a 30-piece orchestra; the members of the orchestra being equally divided on both sides of the newly-constructed platform. This musical group dispensed music from 7 to 9 P. M. on opening night, to the great delight of throngs of people.

Hands, Jr. also used several other stunts and these tied in with his other activities to make the opening an event of State significance, especially as all of the surrounding newspapers carried big stories on it. And now that he has settled down to sell shows regularly at the house, we hope that "E. B." isn't going to be bashful about keeping us posted on his work, and that he'll also send us in a photo and a little dope on himself. Come on, "E. B.," let's have it.

DAVE BORLAND TRANSFERRED!

As a reward for the excellent work which he turned out while he managed the Metropolitan Theatre in Regina, Sas., Canada, Dave Borland has been appointed to the managership of the new Capitol Theatre in Rossland, B. C. He is succeeded at the Metropolitan by Ernie Petch, former stage actor and manager, who is well versed in the game.

Borland is well known to the rest of the Club, his many activities having been often presented on our pages. We are sure that in his new position he is going to turn out some more of the showmanship that characterized his work in Regina.

Some Showmanlike Work Is Displayed In Des Moines, Ia.

Those two live-wire showmen, Moore and Crossman, manager and publicity director, respectively, of the Paramount Theatre in Des Moines, Iowa, certainly see to it that the house is represented in every way possible when they plug a picture.

Recently the Duncan Sisters played an engagement at the theatre, and Grossman capitalized upon the black eye one of the girls received from Rex Lease, a motion picture actor. Benny Bass, junior light-weight champion of the world, was training in Des Moines, and so Grossman conceived the idea of putting the Duncan Sisters in the ring with Bass, and taking a picture of the trio, which broke in a three-column cut in the Register-Tribune, under a caption which explained that Vivian Duncan was getting some pointers on how to protect herself from the warring male. This manufactured news was so good that the Des Moines Register-Tribune received requests from several syndicates for the photo.

The Des Moines paper tipped Grossman off that an aunt of the Duncan Sisters lived in Stuart, Iowa, 45 miles from Des Moines. Grossman hopped in a car and with a newspaper photographer drove to Stuart and arranged for the aunt to invite the Duncan Sisters to a country midnight dinner.

The photographer took pictures of the aunt, which broke in the papers the next morning. The press was declared in on the midnight dinner given in the country to the Duncan Sisters, and the result was a 600-word signed story.

When Manager Willard Moore informed his publicity man that "A Non-stop Flight" would be the title of next week's stage show, Grossman started promoting things from the Yellow Cab Airways, who have an airport in Des Moines. Before he was through, he had 20 free airplane rides promoted, which were given away on four successive nights at the theatre.

The Yellow Cab Airways assumed all responsibility in case of accident, thus protecting the theatre. The Airways company paid for 1,500 tickets which were distributed to patrons as they entered the theatre by two boys in flying togs.

An air show was arranged on the mezzanine of the theatre, consisting of airplane motors, wings at various stages of development, airplane cameras, etc. As an advance advertising feature, the airways concern lent the theatre a 24-foot silk parachute, which was attached to the ceiling by wires. A dummy was suspended from the chute, carrying a compo board sign advertising next week's stage show and the free airplane rides to be given away at the theatre.

Plenty of comment was reported all over the town and the theatre in this way came in for word-of-mouth publicity of the finest sort. We understand that some excellent showmanship is being displayed out at the Paramount. So when we receive their next contribution we hope that these two showmen will include their photos and some dope on themselves.

FOUR SMART ADVTS

Here is a group of four unusually attraticve newspaper ads, available in mat form to theatres playing this attraction.

There is a decided trend among all live-wire showmen to improve their newspaper advertising and surround it with the same beauty and dignity which features the better class house advertising in the larger towns.

These four ads, which we believe were created for use originally at the Warner Bros. Hollywood Theatre on the Coast, have a combination of attractive layouts as well as easy reading text. At any rate it doesn't cost you anything to make a study of them and possibly when you run this picture, you will be glad to use these mats.

Jacob Managed To Put Over One Stunt Anyway On His Show

Due to a change of bookings, A. M. Jacob, manager of the Istrione Theatre, Jackson, Miss. was confronted with adequately advertising his new feature—"Those Who Dance."

Since the feature picture was to be shipped by aeroplane, he arranged with the staff photographer of the local newspaper to shoot the plane upon its arrival—the picture showing the can of film being delivered to the theatre manager.

The caption of the picture in the newspaper was, "Here comes THOSE WHO DANCE" and underneath the picture was a detailed description of what it was all about.

The plane arrived about the middle of the afternoon and the picture of the plane, film and theatre manager was in the evening edition of the paper, all of which helped to advertise the picture. The residents of the town had not seen such fast showmanship displayed in some time and they more than perked up their interest in the film at the local house—all of which meant good business during the playdates.

And that was fast thinking showmanship. Many other managers have had this happen to them, too. And sometimes it happened that they weren't able to get much publicity, though what they did get was valuable. As this little account marks Mr. Jacob's introduction on our pages we hope to hear more from him soon, regarding what else he is doing to sell them. What do you say, A. M."?

WHAT IS EXPLOITATION?

TOM OLSEN Says:

EXPLOITATION, as Daniel Webster has it, means to get the value or usefulness out of something. Transcribed to the showman's glossary it refers to anything and everything that can be done, whether oral or written, to sell a product to the public.

Under the heading of exploitation there comes every known means of bringing the public to the box office. Heading the list is newspaper advertising, followed by lobby displays, screen advertising, publicity material for theatre, house-to-house and mailing list distribution, outdoor advertising, newspaper contests, theatre contests, merchant tie-ups, ballyhoos and co-operative stunts.

While on the subject of definitions it is interesting to note that much-used word "ballyhoo" is not listed in any of Webster's works, at least as late as the 1929 unabridged volume.

However, we of the theatre business take liberties—we're funny that way. The word "ballyhoo" would seem to take in stunts removed from or in front of a theatre that by their unusual nature in movement or sound attract people to the product being sold. To make this a bit clearer, such items as sidewalk and street perambulators, a barker in front of a theatre, would come under the heading of ballyhoo.

While ballyhoo is important, it is often given more weight than it justly deserves, because of lack of clear definition. However, when a manager or exploitation man is told to go out and ballyhoo a picture to the limit, the instructions, strictly interpreted, would merely scratch the surface of a thoroughly planned exploitation campaign.

Definitions, at a glance to a showman, may appear superfluous. What we are all concerned with is packing our theatre to the doors. But in any business, it is always well to have a definitely planned chart of the duties clearly impressed upon the mind. Therefore, this humble treatise.

E. EMERLING Says:

WHEN is a press agent not a press agent? When he's an exploiteer—and other times that we won't mention.

Exploitation covers a multitude of sins—and sinners. Actors cry for it—producers demand it and with present day competition—managers and their P. A.'s get it!

Perhaps all present day theatrical publicity can be grouped under the head of Exploitation, however the idea is not strictly theatrical in scope. Department-stores and other commercial advertisers have seen the value of publicity that is "different." The ever increasing momentum of the business world has made necessary some form of advertising that will carry the producers' and retailers' message to the public not only by the medium of the printed sheet, but from divers other angles.

Barnum has justly been accredited with being the granddaddy of the theatrical publicity and exploitation of the past century—yet it has remained for the managers and publicists of the new school to attract the attention of the entire commercial world to theatrical methods of advertising. Many managers of the old school who have graduated into the new era are their own "worst enemies." The methods we must resort to today were not necessary twenty or thirty years ago. The legitimate theatre was in its hey-day and the movies in their swaddling clothes. Theater-going was confined to the few traveling attractions, and the intermittent visits of Broadway stars of the day. The advent of the motion picture—a new sort of entertainment that was to revolutionize the entire amusement world, absorbed the players, the executives and almost the very soul of the legitimate stage. Hundreds found themselves in a new world as unlike their previous environment as day is like unto night. Many adjusted themselves to the new conditions keeping pace with the progress of this new craft. Others plodded along living in the memories of the past, stubborn against the enroachments of the present. They were not sold on the movies and in the long run:—on themselves. Exploitation was idiotic—unnecessary and a gross waste of effort! When we glance through the newspapers of the country, through the publicity reports of various organizations and on nearly any "Main Street" of the land, we feel how mistaken they have been. Any activity that is unworthy will burn out of its own accord if left alone—still the past two years have seen the greatest effort in all theatrical history along publicity lines.

We'll agree that there's good exploitation and bad. Some exploitation IS a waste of money but we believe that when striking an average—real exploitation is not found wanting.

The old adage "There's nothing new under the sun" can apply to exploitation as well as everything else. If you dig below the surface of the most original stunt you'll find a likeness of some other fellow's stunt, and so on—far back into the dim past. We expect any day to find someone using Barnum's "brick" stunt in progress along Broadway—and if Barnum were alive he'd probably tell us he got the idea from the crowds watching a bricklayer at work. Many managers attribute their reluctance to copying good stunts that are used in other cities to their desire to do something "original." In this attitude their doing both themselves and their company a great injustice—for a "Raffles" hunt is just as good in Texarkana as in Tuscaloosa! Of course, if you're a good "copy cat" you can doctor the other fellow's stunt up so that he won't recognize it—and it'll look great on the old weekly report!

FRANK BOUCHER Says:

EXPLOITATION and ballyhoo are the bane of a theatre manager's existence. High officials in Theatre operation tell us that we over-exploit. That the people are tired of stunts, freak advertising, etc. Yet it must be done. There is not a picture that can be sold without exploitation. Some pictures register with the patron from the time they are first shown. But one of our questions is, How Much More Would It have Done, Had it been properly exploited?

I for one am strongly in favor of exploitation and ballyhoo. The proper type of such exploitation however must be picked for each type of picture. Every picture produced lends itself to a certain form of advertising. If a picture is properly studied by the Theatre manager, and sometimes screened by him in advance of his playdate, he can ofttimes get a better idea as to what can be done and how. Study your title, your star and the type of story and sit down and sketch up a campaign that is suitable for it. It can be done systematically and economically. It merely takes a little foresight, a little imagination and a little work. But remember every picture can be exploited without harming the theatre or future pictures. A litle judgment must be used in the selection of the campaign to be used. Get your bookings in advance—get your press books far enough ahead to study them, so that they can be merged with your own ideas. The combination is an excellent one—that of the press book and some of your own ideas.

But always remember the people expect such things of our business—and it can be done on all pictures, in all towns. The principal thing is to know how. This can be ascertained by studying your town, your theatre and the picture.

LARRY COWEN Says:

AS per Webster, Exploitation defined, means "To make use of for ones own Profit." It seems very easy to understand.

For instance, we, of the show business, must develop interest in what we sell, and do it quickly. Campbell can sell his beans any day, we book a picture, play it a week, and poof—we are through with it forever.

In explaining the meaning of exploitation, it is easier to give an example showing the results. Here you are:

Not long ago a picture was booked, Buddy Rogers in "Safety in Numbers." We had the star to sell, we had to create interest in the title, and by so doing as per Webster "Make use of for our own Profit." As the title had to do with numbers—we tied up a well known Numerologist, to appear on the mezzanine of the theatres playing the picture, exploiting the fact with copy "Safety in Numbers" and "Safety through Numbers" by visiting our House playing the feature, seeing Miss Williams the Numerologist, they to receive Free, an analysis, of themselves.

So we received free exploitation—through the fact that the Numerologist gave her services free to us, for such advertising as the Star and picture gave to her. In other words we exploited her—she exploited us. "We made use of for our own profit," for we certainly were successful, had the theatre full of folks who came not once but several times. Without this extra push, that we call exploitation, many would not have come to the theatre, they may have a house nearer their home, who in time would receive the picture, but not the numerologist. Because this was news the papers gave it a push, and several wrote up the act, and others even went so far, as to send reporters, to find out what it was all about and to cap it all, the numerologist received an autographed picture of Buddy Rogers.

That is my idea of Exploitation—GET SOMETHING FOR NOTHING THAT WILL HELP MAKE A PROFIT FOR YOU, AND TELL THE WORLD ABOUT IT.

Remember advertising is what you pay for—EXPLOITATION is what you get for nothing—and it beats advertising every time.

We continue the series this week by passing along the viewpoints of Tom Olsen of Fox Washington Theatre (D. C.), Ernest Emerling, publicity department of Loew's, Inc., Frank Boucher, Hagerstown District Manager for Warner Bros., and Larry Cowen, publicity director of the Schwartz-Century Circuit of N. Y.

HALLOWE'EN HINTS!

With Hallowe'en only a few weeks away, showmen all over the country are lining up their stunts to put across this ever-popular—especially in the small towns—day.

A trip to your local library will more than reward you with gags, as the books containing Hallowe'en suggestions are just crammed full with material which can be rehashed to suit your wishes.

As the kids are generally in school on the day in which the eve falls, you could run a special after-school show, announcing that each kid will be presented with jack-o-lanterns, candles, or stuff of like nature which you should be able to procure from a local dealer, or, failing that, purchase for a small expenditure from the wholesale jobber.

Robb Lawson Gives Some Dope On Show Activity In London

Located on the other side of the big pond, Robb Lawson is turning out some fine showmanship at the United Artists Film House, in Wardour Street, London, England. Lawson is the publicity director for the theatre and if you think that it is a cinch to sell shows in England then you have another guess coming. One of his greatest handicaps to hurdle is that of securing publicity in the newspapers. At times he even has trouble securing reviews. The critics look upon the movies as something useless, but that must be tolerated. The newspaper editors adopt the same platform. In their estimation, publicity stories on pictures are only to be used when they can't get anything else. This leaves it up to Lawson to keep his house before the public by other and more effective means.

In the photos we are showing you'll get a line on how this up-to-the-minute showman ties up with the local merchants and grabs off space in their windows for displays. In one of them you can see a window display that was done in the hub of London at Piccadilly Circus. This display has never been duplicated, by this we mean that the window couldn't be crashed again. It was never crashed before the first time. And if the theatre hadn't happened to have a natural for the merchandiser, it wouldn't have happened at all.

Window tie-ups are not Lawson's only activities though. He also engineers what we would call high-powered publicity, as witness the time Gloria Swanson was in England for a visit. She was scheduled to attend the theatre, and when she arrived the crowd of people broke loose from the usually strict police lines and almost mobbed her. She was saved by one of the police sergeants. The next day a story and a picture broke in all of the London papers, and was also syndicated. In this manner Lawson, whose picture, by the way, we are showing above, secured some valuable news space at no cost to himself.

We would like to direct your attention, for the moment, to the crowds of people lined up waiting to gain entrance into the house. This speaks well for the showmanship displayed by the executives who operate the theatre. If you will study the photo closely you will note that England, too, believes in the cut-out idea. And you'll see that the three sheet posters of the movie stars, as well as a scene from the film are pressed into service. The displays at the Film House are made as attractive as possible, and often these showmen outdo themselves when they have a special picture which will allow them freedom in which to work. The novel display idea is carried out only at rare intervals though, as it has been found that the patrons and passersby will pay more attention to it, than when it is made a weekly feature. In the other photo in the cut we are using you can see the mob of 5,000 people out front of the New Gallery Theatre to greet Gloria Swanson. Two motor generators were used to display the arc and flood lights. It required 70 constables and 12 mounted policemen to control the crowds, and, as we have stated elsewhere, they were barely enough.

On another page of this issue will be found Mr. Lawson's observations on show exploiting in England. In it is contained many slants that will throw some light on the question "how do they sell shows in England?" Look it over and we are sure you will agree with us that Mr. Lawson has doped the situation out rightly. And when you read his dope then you can figure out how lucky you are.

Holden Bound For Havana; Or Maybe He's Back Already

From the latest dope we have on hand, we glean that Earle Holden is on his vacation. The live-wire manager of the Fairfax Theatre in Miami, Fla., has chosen Havana, Cuba, as his resting place for the time he is off. Some break for you Earle.

Havana, so we are told, is the land where beautiful Senoritas sit on iron-clad balconies at night, waiting to be woed, provided you can play a guitar or a ukelele. Which most of us can't. But then why woo with music anyway? Be like a certain showman with whom we are well acquainted. He is going to bring along some of the pipes from the organ, and try his luck. In case of emergency he has provided himself with a portable radio—the same one he used the last time he was in the city. He has fixed it, though, in order not to endure a recurrence of his former "embarrassing moment." He had just tuned in on a caballero crooning over the air to his many sweetheart listeners. Looking into the Senorita's eyes as she sat enraptured, spellbound by the sweet tones issuing forth from the machine, our hero grasped her hand tenderly. The damosel offered no resistance. Encouraged, our hero tried to steal a kiss. Suddenly—spps, spatt, splutter—the wires crossed in some manner, and a tube blew out. Right in the middle of the love song! The next day there appeared, in the paper, an ad announcing a radio for sale. No one ever bought it, though. Seems as if the Havanians knew their onions.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

McKoy's Assistant Steps to The Front With Helpful Work

That live-wire showman-manager of the Olympia Theatre in Miami, Fla., James H. McKoy, has an alert assistant by the name of Falkenburg, who figured recently in a valuable tie-up that helped the success of McKoy's campaign.

Falkenburg sold the Chief of Police on the idea of changing the copy on the traffic signs attached to the electric light poles. All of the signs on the light poles carried copy reading, "30 Minute Parking Limit in this Block from 8. A.M. to 6 P.M." This copy was somewhat changed by replacing the old signs with new ones, copy reading, "Park Here 30 Minutes Only—It takes two hours to see 'Raffles' at the Olympia. Tues.-Wed.-Thurs." These signs were placed on every other pole on Flagler street and on the side streets that have heavy traffic.

McKoy himself carried out a splendid idea when he put on a necklace contest. One hundred ten-cent necklaces were purchased at the 5 & 10-cent store. To each one of these necklaces was attached a tag on which appeared copy, "Perhaps!! This is the very Necklace that Raffles is looking for. Bring it to the Olympia Theatre and if it is exactly like the one on display in the lobby you will get a pass to see Ronald Colman in 'Raffles'." These necklaces were effectively distributed throughout the city in order to obtain the resultant publicity from the stunt.

As is usual with McKoy's campaigns, they clicked. The slight expenditure made for the necklaces was more than paid back in the additional business, or we should say, packed houses. And we'd like you to know that McKoy does it nearly every week; and if you have followed past issues of the Club you will have noticed how he sold them by stunts that were sure-fire.

Newsreel Came In For Plenty Of Play From Herb Morgan

Right on the heels of our announcement regarding the value of keeping a close check on the newsreel shots in the event that an item of local interest might be screened we learned that Herbert Morgan, manager of the State Theatre in Dayton, Ohio, used a stunt similar to the idea.

The Cincinnati and Lake Erie Railroad Company placed a new type of high-speed car into service to boost business. As a publicity stunt, they arranged to have an airplane race. The newsreels were informed of the stunt and Pathe had a couple of men on the scene to shoot the race. Before the car started off, it was displayed on a side track in the center of the town for a day or so. A large banner, plugging the theatre, announced the place where the race would be staged. In the photos we are showing you can get a slant or two on it. Two special displays were secured in the windows of the largest banks in the town.

To make the car ballyhoo more effective, an amplifier was hooked up and installed in it. The horns could be plainly heard on the sidewalks and this attracted plenty of attention. The traction company also wrote a letter to each of their employees in the local shops, requesting that they see the picture in the Pathe News at the State Theatre.

We want to thank Mr. Morgan for passing this one along to us as we feel it is of particular interest to Club members. And, by the way, Mr. Morgan, we hear that you are turning out some fine showmanship in Dayton; keep us posted.

TRAILER SLANTS!

We had no idea what we started when we got behind the discussion of trailers last spring and followed it up with opinions from many showmen from all over the country.

Some people took the liberty of capitalizing on the published comments of several managers and making it appear that the Round Table Club was in favor of some particular type of trailer.

When showmen have reached that point where they cannot think for themselves we will have to turn this department into a kindergarden for theatre men, but we are confident that they can not only think, but also act, without promptings or biased opinions from outside sources.

What is great in Palooka may be applesauce in Sqweedunk. And vice-versa. But when we get "het up" about some slant in show-business, we do so because we honestly feel that the topic is timely and will prove of value to our thousands of members and readers, the world over. Subsequent events have proven, beyond all doubt, that such is the case.

On our recent trip to the coast we sat in the back row of a theatre one morning and watched a talking trailer being screened. After it was over the manager, and a mighty capable gent too, expressed himself in no small way on how "lousy" that trailer was. Maybe we were all wet, but we thought it was a doggoned fine plug for the coming attraction and even better than the average.

Which proves that we can't all be expected to see things in the same light. Perhaps his views were right, then again maybe we had the right dope. But the important point is, that a manager must know his town, his theatre and his public. At least he is supposed to. Therefore, he must be the judge of what he wants on his screen.

BUT, that doesn't mean that the whole wide world must condemn that particular trailer just because he didn't like it. In some other town the manager might rave over it as being the finest he ever ran.

These differences of opinion are what makes show-business as fascinating as it is. And the reason why we are making so much of an issue of it, is because we dislike being quoted in any way that might mislead anyone.

If my own humble opinion means a good gosh-darn to anyone, I'll tell the whole cock-eyed world that I AM in favor of the talking trailer on coming attractions, BUT not in doses of four to six at any one time. The most appetizing food you ever ate would make you sick and tired of it if you had to eat a whole pot full at one sitting.

Sidney Holland Is Still Turning Out Trailer Prologues

Since he is rapidly becoming known for his trailer presentation, and mostly because of the fact that the people enjoy them so much, Sidney Holland, manager of the Paramount Theatre in Hammond, Ind., is introducing novelties on every new trailer he presents.

For "Song o' My Heart" he arranged one which created much favorable comment and, in addition to being a good advertising device, was a splendid entertainment feature, too.

The trailer was run, and as the traveler closed in following the trailer, showing the regular organ feature, slide announcement was made which included the information that the organist would play a medley of John McCormack favorites. After playing several of the numbers from "Song o' My Heart," the slide announced that no McCormack program would be complete without a vocal rendition of "Song o' My Heart," and followed this with an introduction to a young tenor who did a vocal solo with organ accompaniment.

And just to show you that Holland knows his stuff in other lines, too, here's a little dope on how he sold "Dangerous Nan McGrew" via a street ballyhoo.

He secured the first horse car ever used in Chicago and painted it over to resemble an old stage coach. Two teams of horses were hitched to the stage coach and the slow-moving salesman meandered through the city for two days prior to the opening. Appropriate cards established the proper sales idea.

There was plenty of hilarity occasioned, too. And when that happened, Holland knew that the final results would more than merit the time he had spent in planning the idea.

Floyd L. Bell Is Now Telling Boston About Metropolitan

It's too bad that we have to introduce him to you without his picture, but we hope that he will remedy this with his next contribution. Meet, via this article, Floyd L. Bell, publicity director for the Metropolitan Theatre in Boston, Mass.

Bell is handling the job held by Harry Browning and he is sure stepping on the gas and getting out some good work. Like his predecessor, there is nothing going on around Boston in which he doesn't have a hand. If a new store opens, and it is of sufficient interest to tie in the Met, he is right on hand. He proved this in the case of the opening of the New Manger Hotel. He arranged to have a number of the artists appearing in the current stage show register at the hotel on the opening day. Among those registering were Senator Murphy and Alice Weaver, featured in the revue, in addition to Esther Newcombe, one of the organists at the house. The picture which we are showing here crashed all of the Boston Sunday papers. The Manger Hotel displayed a special sign in the lobby calling the attention of the guests and the sightseers to the attraction playing at the theatre.

One of the many reasons for the continued good business at the Met may be seen in the other photo we are reproducing which shows the crowd of patrons taking advantage of the free dancing which the theatre offers. This angle has caught on like wildfire in Boston and has proven to be one of the best good-will builders that the theatre has ever had. You will notice, in the background, that they have a rather large orchestra, too. How about you getting set and offering free dancing? If you have the space, all you need is a victrola, and a usher to wind it. Or maybe you can promote a local band to supply the music. There are possibilities. Look 'em over.

We want to thank Mr. Bell for the interest he is showing in the Club and we hope that the photo will be forthcoming with his future efforts. What do you say, Floyd?

Peeling Potatoes On Sidewalk A Plug For "Anybody's War"

A stunt that had his town talking was that utilized by Frank J. Miller, manager of the Imperial Theatre in Augusta, Ga., to plug his showing of "Anybody's War," when he hired a man to sit on the sidewalk and peel potatoes.

In order to use this stunt Miller found it necessary to secure permission from the city official to use a certain portion of the sidewalk in a busy downtown section, and, since the moguls readily agreed it may be seen that something must be thought of Miller in the town. A restaurant was tied in on the stunt and they agreed to buy all the potatoes, that the man peeled.

The colored man was actually surrounded with heaps of potatoes similar to the scene from the picture. To make the stunt more effective, the negro had a lazy way about him when peeling the potatoes—much to the delight of his many on-lookers—wondering if he ever hoped to complete the job.

Stationed here and there among the huge pile of potatoes were stills from the picture and neatly-lettered cards giving sales copy about picture, stars, theatre and playdates.

The stunt was one of the biggest pulled in the city in so far as interest was concerned. As evidence that the stunt pulled, the three-day run of the picture was extended for two days longer to permit all the people to see the picture that wanted to.

And when extended runs are the order of the day, we know that Miller is a showman who knows his business. We want to hear more of your work, Frank, so keep in touch with us.

Torrid Ted Toddy!

His many friends will no doubt be glad to know that the whirlwind exploiter, Ted Toddy, now exploiting pictures for Columbia is all set to open with a new picture, in Pittsburgh, Pa.

It seems to us that the "Smoky City" will have to go some to keep up with the smoke Ted makes when he starts to sell his goods, because with the background of theatrical training that he has had, he knows his stuff. For a number of years he was connected with theatre operation, so he is well informed on the managerial end of the racket too. Good luck, Ted.

BACKGAMMON- - -!

The present craze for the good old-fashioned game of Backgammon offers many interesting possibilities for live-wire showmen.

You, no doubt, recall the many fine angles which propped up during the Mah Jongg era, not so many years ago, so why not cash in on this one?

Besides sponsoring Backgammon on your mezzanine or foyer, where you can set up a dozen tables and games, furnished by a local toy shop, you can promote contests with all sorts of donations from the various merchants in town. Then again, you might try giving some of the sets away.

Fine co-operation is being offered by the manufacturers of this popular pastime and a talk with the toy department in the stores will reveal dozens of ways to capitalize on what they are all talking about right now.

As a timely suggestion it is worth looking into.

Monkey Business In Evidence When Irwin Pulled Gag

A lobby display that caused no end of comment was used by used by George B. Irwin, at the Paramount Theatre in St. Cloud recently to sell "Animal Crackers" to the residents.

Foremost among the lobby display exhibits was a monkey in a gilded cage. A card was on the cage, reading "This is one of the man-killing animals that Groucho Marx hunted in Africa. See these nuts, that made lunacy a pleasure in ANIMAL CRACKERS, Sept. 9-10-11." This monkey kept a throng about him every afternoon and evening during the week.

During run of picture, a very small leopard cub was obtained and this animal was also put on exhibition in a cage in the lobby to attract more attention.

The lobby also showed a number of chairs suspended from the ceiling—hung in zigzag shape to give the impression that the picture was as dizzy and nutty as it was advertised to be. And in another part of the lobby was a palm tree with a cut-out of one of the Marx Bros. underneath. Copy on a card alongside this cut-out read, "The nuts of COCOANUTS—The wise-crackers of ANIMAL CRACKERS, etc."

The entire lobby exhibit was obtained at no cost to the theatre and certainly proved an excellent medium in popularizing the picture.

Listen, George, we understand from a friend of yours that you are turning out some great work at the Paramount. Why not pass some more of it along to us. Let's have some photos of your lobby displays, and when you send them in, include one of yourself, together with a little note telling of your career. Oke?

The monkey, incidentally, was promoted from a local dealer, who willingly agreed to let him cavort about the theatre lobby during the run of the picture, in return for a credit line. Plenty of hilarity was occasioned by the antics of the African anthropoid with the theatre box-office getting the last laugh.

SELLING YOUR PATRONS

At this time of the year much interest can be directed toward the many outstanding productions to be released and to play at your theatre.

Some showmen make their announcements in the form of trailers, others by personal letters to their mailing list as well as other lists, still others find their house program the logical place to discuss the subject.

On the Century Circuit's current program booklet we happened to notice the way they tackled the idea and we pass it along in the hope that it will be of value to you in arranging something similar.

Here is the way the copy read:

R. Kuehn To Kaplan Resulted In Double Play At Tivoli B.O.

Here is a manager who knows how to follow out suggestions and at the same time add his own little bit. Acting on the suggestion of Rudy Kuehn, general manager of the Consolidated Amusement Enterprises in New York City—and a g.m. who knows his business—Jack Kaplan, of the Tivoli Theatre in New York City turned out some corking showmanship to sell "the Big Fight" to good box-office.

Located as he is, right around Madison Square Garden and numerous other places of Fistiana, such as training camps, etc., and having an acquaintance with a number of prize fighters, he was able to secure a collection of ring trophies that were placed on display in the lobby. The house, in addition to catering to neighborhood trade, picks up a lot of transients, and many persons passing by could not resist the copy on the marquee, which proclaimed that the big fight was taking place inside. The photos we are showing with this article will tell more than words the story of the campaign. Even in the front of the house carried out the fight atmosphere, as you will notice if you'll look closely at the main gate (box-office) and the ringside seats (admissions) have a bell, clanged at frequent intervals, and this served to attract the attention of pedestrians on both sides of the street, as well as passing autoists.

We'd like to ask you also to scrutinize the lobby display. There's a thing that would attract interest in any house in any part of the world—even in England, which, as you know, is more than particular as to how its boxing prizes are "laid out." Stills and cut-outs group abouts grouped about the display enhanced its effectiveness. Spots played upon the valuable belt, emblematic of a championship bout, won by a former pugilistic favorite. Photos of the fight idols, yesterday and today, formed an interesting background.

The trophies were borrowed from the various owners by Kaplan and Nat Fleisher of "The Ring," a nationally known boxing publication, and the strength of this display was seen in the capacity business turned out for the run of the film. And we might mention at this time that it is not only on "The Big Fight" type of picture that Kuehn makes it a rule that his men concentrate, but on every film and on every other thing that will bring home the trademark of the Consolidated Amusement Enterprises and the fact that they are selling amusement and service.

We have added the word service in order that you may appreciate and understand, more fully, just how this circuit, an independent chain, has become one of the best operated in the city. The ushers in the various houses are drilled in the same manner as the de luxe staffs are drilled. The houses, not being three thousand seaters, though we believe the circuit harbors a couple, the service turned out is remarkable. We ourselves have personally visited a couple of the houses and observed how Kuehn keeps them running, and we'd like to say that you will have to go a long way to duplicate them. Just a couple of weeks ago a member, attached to Club headquarters, had a lot of praise for the way E. W. Gould ran the Columbus while the regular manager was on his vacation. He tells us that not once was there a hitch in the show, everything going like clockwork, and Gould on the job every minute. They are like that all over the circuit. The men are well treated, given a day off, and a vacation. As a result, they are more than willing to work hard to show their appreciation.

We want to hand a compliment to Rudy Kuehn for the pep he has injected into the circuit, and also to Kaplan and the other managers whose continued activity keeps this circuit's houses running right along with the best showmanship.

Telephone Hangers Were Placed on All Of the Public Phones

From Sydney, Australia, comes a few gags which we are passing along to you in order that you may see what the showmen over there are doing to sell them, and at the same time to give you your pick in the event that you may be able to use them.

When "King of Jazz" played at the Hoyt Theatres, Lorry Webb of the press department distributed a number of bank notes printed in blue, made up to resemble a real check such as are used in Sydney. The check authorized the bank to pay each patron the sum of two and a half hours of superlative entertainment, the total value being 250,000 pounds. The checks carried the same copy on both sides.

The same sort of idea was carried out for "All Quiet" when mock ticket stubs, along the order of reserved seats, were imprinted with selling copy relating to the film. Another gag that helped put the picture across was a quantity of special automobile stickers, with a special design on them, and attractively colored. Webb passes along a stunt that helped him sell "Anna Christie." Telephone hangers with copy that stated the person phoning was just in time to book seats for the theatre, and also gave the phone number, were placed on the mouthpieces of phones in all of the public places. This angle created quite a stir and a number of persons took advantage of the suggestion.

And—oh, yes! A word about the special booklet turned out for the preview of "King of Jazz" at the Regent seems necessary. The booklet was well made up, and printed in a blue tone. The front cover carried the institutional plug and a photo of a couple of dancing girls. The inner pages carried the program and scenes from the production. The expenditure for this program, in view of its beauty, was surprisingly small.

We want to thank Lorry for sending these along to us, as we believe an angle or two will be found helpful and put to use by his fellow-showmen. Keep it up, Lorry, and remember we want to hear from you again real soon.

W. Ponton Presented The Teachers With A Special Invitation

It is the little things like this that keep showmen doing the big things that they do when they bust records at their houses. An excellent stunt was pulled by W. H. Ponton, manager of the Carolina Theatre in Fayetteville, N. C., recently that meant something toward boosting the good-will at his house and plugging its institutional value.

Ponton learned that there were 123 new school teachers coming from other town who would teach in and around Fayetteville this coming year. Ponton then obtained the teachers' addresses and sent them a letter of greeting and welcome.

The letter he sent out was as follows:

"Dear Teacher: The manager and staff of the Carolina Theatre extend to you a hearty welcome to our city.

"We join in the friendly welcome that has been extended to you. We are proud of our city and feel sure that the reasons for our pride will appeal to you also.

"We should like to extend our welcome in person, and for this reason invite you to visit the Carolina Theatre as our guest.

"This letter, when presented at the box-office, will admit you as our guest."

The teachers were more than pleased with the letters and many of them did not hesitate to shoot him a note telling him about it. And when the letters began to arrive, Ponton felt that he could safely say the theatre had acquired 123 new patrons. With this as his first contribution, we must say that he is showing that he will be an active member, and we hope he will continue.

Former Song Hit Was Dusted Off And Utilized By Seward

A showman who displayed his knowledge of showmanship recently was Alfred L. Seward of the Strand Theatre in Ocean City, N. J., and he certainly put it across.

When he played "Holiday," he recalled that there used to be a popular tune with the same name as the picture. He dug it out, and one of the musicians in the theatre composed a new set of words for the number. The song was then played as an organ solo with the audience joining in heartily with the music. A set of slides, containing popular numbers, were also used and the choruses would close with the special "Holiday" verse ending.

The angle proved a corker for Seward as it more than pepped people up and they evidenced great interest in the coming feature attraction. We are certainly glad to note that this showman is right on the go, and we hope that he is going to keep us posted on some future work because when a showman is such a live-wire we feel that his work should be passed along to the rest of the show selling managers throughout the country. What do you think about it, Alfred? We have an idea you agree.

Big Book Featured Marchand Display At Saenger House

Patrons entering or leaving the Saenger Theatre in Mobile, Ala., were bound to see and be sold on the unusual coming attraction plug, in the form of an enlarged duplicate of the book that Harry Marchand used to plug "All Quiet On the Western Front."

The enlarged book was about five feet in height and four feet in width and was an exact duplicate of the book cover. It was made with a cutawl machine—showing the facial expressions and eyes of the German soldier. This was backed with crepe paper and lights—to give it a very effective look. Directly at the foot of the book was placed a great number of toy soldiers carrying guns, miniature trees, cannons and supply trucks with dirt scattered around to represent the "front." It was necessary to keep an usher on duty to guard this display for fear the patrons would molest the decorations in some way.

The book was placed on the inside of the foyer close to the balcony stairway three weeks in advance. And four days in advance, the book was removed to the front window of a drug store where it remained throughout the picture's run. The 75 cents edition of the book reached Mobile just in time to get some good window tie-ups. And Marchand took full advantage of all windows of book stores and libraries to exploit the picture, theatre and playdates.

All over the town, wherever books were sold, the book could be found tied-in with the theatre. This one slant alone did wonders for the run of the picture, and when you add it on to the many other stunts, all known to showmen, that Marchand pulled, you'll know that he did a record business. Right, Harry?

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

CONSTANT INCREASE IN MEMBERS IS PROOF POSITIVE OF CLUB'S GREAT WORTH

DON W. ROSS is the manager of the Regent Theatre in Harrisburg, Pa., that town famous for showmanship in the past. We hope that it is also going to harbor more of it, and we are sure that if it does (or perhaps it already does, Mr. Ross is going to be among the leaders. Why not send us in a line or two, Don, giving us the dope on it? And at the same time include your photo.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

WILLIAM F. NITSCHKE manages the Astoria Theatre in Astoria, Long Island, N. Y., and he is located in a place that affords him an opportunity for entering into the competition displayed by the rest of the showmen of his district. Though we haven't received any reports of late from the Astoria battle front, we are of the opinion that Mr. Nitschke is holding his own. Keep us in touch with your activity, Bill, so that we can get the low-down.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

A. M. JACOB manages the Istrione Theatre in Jackson, Miss., and from all accounts he is acquitting himself creditably. However, we do not expect you to believe our say so, we are going to present some of Mr. Jacob's work in a future issue of the Round Table and then you can see for yourself. And listen, "A. M.," don't be bashful about swamping us with material. We like it that way.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

FRED BREWER assists Al. Fourmet in the management of the Paramount Theatre in Abilene, Texas. According to Al, Mr. Brewer is a comer in the business and he thinks that we are going to hear a lot more of him. Oke, Fred, and remember to keep us posted so that we can keep tabs on your progress.

These Showmen Say 'Aye'!

K. E. WHEELER is the Assistant Manager of the Strand Theatre in Oswego, New York. Mr. Sarr, the manager of the house, gives him a great send-off, and if Wheeler lives up to it, we have an idea that he will be handling his own house before many moons go by. Keep us posted on what you are doing to help sell shows at the Strand, "K. E.," so that we can check up on your progress.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

W. L. CRULL, JR., manages the Strand Theatre in Memphis, Tenn. Mr. Crull is an ardent booster of the Round Table, and now that he has become a member we feel that he is going to be an active contributor, too. He has been turning out some excellent work in his neighborhood, and when he passes some of it to Club headquarters we hope to find his photo included, together with some dope on himself.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

C. J. RUSSELL, Jr. comes to the Club from the Opera House in Bangor, Maine, which he manages. And very capably. We have secured a little dope on what Mr. Russell is doing to keep his house before the residents of his town, and we shall present it to you on the Club pages in a future issue. And we hope that when he sends us in his next contribution, Mr. Russell, Jr., will also include his photo.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

EDWARD HART is the manager of the Academy Theatre in Newburgh, N. Y. From indications, it looks to us as though this city is now 100% Round Table, every showman in it being a Club member. Well, that gives them a chance to display some fast work to see who can rank as the leader of the group. How about you, Edward? Give us the low-down on what you are doing, will you?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

FRED THOMAS manages the Capitol Theatre in Winchester, Va. Fred comes to the Club also proposed by Frank Boucher. And, as we said before, when Frank proposes them we are glad to know we have acquired more live-wires, because he knows how to pick 'em. Listen, Mr. Thomas, we want to hear more from you very soon, so that we can pass along news of what you are doing.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

HARRY BACHMAN is the Assistant Manager of the Metropolitan Theatre in Baltimore, Maryland. Located in a big city and proposed for membership by Frank Boucher, it looks as though Mr. Bachman has made a very auspicious start as a Club member. Keep in touch with us, Harry, so that we can note your progress, will you?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

RAY V. POWELL is the manager of the Tudor Theatre in New Orleans, La. Mr. Powell is no stranger to the Club and though this is his induction into membership, he has been represented on our pages before. However, since everyone must be represented here at some time or other, here you are, Ray.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

H. E. WEBSTER is the City Manager for Publix in Kankakee, Ill. He is located at the Majestic Theatre and the work he is turning out there more than proves why he was promoted to city manager. Listen Mr. Webster, give us some more dope on yourself and the live-wires working with you.

THOMAS J. SIMMONS is the manager of the Rialto Theatre in Morrilton, Arkansas. We want to welcome Mr. Simmons into the Club and let him know that his membership boosts up our enrollment from his state another notch and if he keeps in step with the rest of the show ability being displayed there's going to be plenty of fireworks coming along. Send us in a photo of yourself, Tom, so that we can let the rest of the Club meet you.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

ABE SHERR is the manager of the Plaza Theatre in Milwaukee, Wis. We thought that we had just about received the membership application from every showman in Milwaukee, but we must have overlooked Abe. Well anyway, this should sign the town up as 100% Round Table, putting it right in the ranks with the other hustling towns who boast the same distinction. Welcome into the Club, Abe.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

WALTER W. MURPHY is the manager of the Roxy Theatre in Perth Amboy, New Jersey. He has served many years in show business as a projectionist, shifting from there to his present position. He is very active at the Roxy and his future work will probably be productive of a number of slants on show selling, that will also help his fellow members.

A daring and spectacular visit to 1980. Packed with surefire song hits. Dazzling dances by huge ballet. Marvelous futuristic settings. Heart touching romance. An eyefeast of gorgeous scenes. Bigger than "Sunny Side Up," created by some producers and director!

. . . Then why give them sound projection like this?

Your public that demanded good projection now insists upon clear, natural sound reproduction. Unless they get both in your theatre, you are giving them only a part of the show.

The recording of talkies by Western Electric apparatus—used exclusively by producers who make 8 out of every 10 pictures—has reached a high point of excellence.

It is now more important than ever that you use equipment capable of reproducing everything that directors and stars put into these productions.

Western Electric theatre equipment—designed and built as part of a complete system for recording and reproducing sound—serviced by ERPI to maintain quality—brings out everything that's in the picture.

That's why—week after week—the crowds flock to the nearly 7000 Western Electric equipped houses all over the world.

Only Western Electric equipment can give the complete show that brings maximum bnsiness to your theatre.

Wall St. Tightens Grip on Industry When Bear Raids Batter Down Stocks

90% Pollyanna

Hollywood—Joe Schenck did a mind-changing act on his way back from New York, and he was filled with the Pollyanna spirit when he stepped off the train. Said he to the reporters:

"Prosperity is here! The slump, insofar as the entertainment world is concerned, in my opinion is definitely ended. I base my opinion upon the constantly increasing receipts from our theatres, and upon many conferences with business leaders over the nation."

But the 10 per cent cut in United Artists salaries Schenk made in New York still stands!

Stock Exchange Turns Binoculars On Film Concerns

With reports of financial difficulties of film firms and their bankers in circulation, the New York Stock Exchange is making an effort to uncover sources of reports relating to the financial position of member firms.

Member firms have been asked to submit to the exchange's business conduct com-

Del Rio and U. A. Sing Swan Song and a Finale

Hollywood—Despite statement made by Joseph M. Schenck upon his return from New York that future plans for Dolores Del Rio will await recovery from her illness, the inside slant on the situation is that Del Rio and United Artists have sung a joint swan song.

It may be accents and talkers or dwindling box-office draw, for both reasons are reported in some quarters to be the explanation.

Paramount Studio Heads To Map Economy Program

Trimming of overhead and installation of Ernst Lubitsch as supervising director are scheduled at the Paramount Long Island studio by Walter F. Wanger, general manager of the production department; B. P. Schulberg, managing director of production, and Sam Jaffe, production manager of the Hollywood studios, who are in New York from the Coast.

Murray W. Dodge Looms As Big Power in Fox—Warners Also Linked in Deal

Domination of the film industry by the bankers drew nearer this week as a result of attacks on amusement stocks by bear raiders in Wall Street, with the moneyed interests seizing the opportunity to strengthen their hold on picture companies.

One of the major and immediate results of the market manipulations was the projection into a position of importance in the picture business of a new figure in Murray W. Dodge, vice-president of the Chase Securities Corp., who henceforth will play a role of significance in the various Fox enterprises. Dodge was elected a director of Fox Film after Chase Securities had advanced $10,000,000 to Pynchon & Co., Wall Street brokerage house, to offset bear raids on the Harley L. Clarke stocks which embrace Fox Film, Fox Theatres, General Theatre Equipment, Loew's and his utilities holdings.

Meanwhile, Pynchon and Co., specialist in the Clarke issues, was reported making heavy purchases in Warners which on Thursday was the second most active stock on the New York Stock Exchange. One hundred and sixteen thousand three hundred shares changed hands during the trading day with reports current in the financial

Celluloid and Bull-oney

One of New York's better known independent distributors, who constantly hoasts of his keen knowledge of pictures and their box-office values, drew a joker the other day which should be instrumental in forever sealing the lips from which emanate a sickening line of self-flattery and egotistical verbage.

For weeks he had been a great annoyance in local picture circles in his attempt to get the bookers and larger distributors to look at his new talker which he touted as a "sure thing," "g r e a t money-maker," "marvelous story with a sensational box-office angle," etc., etc.

He did succeed in rounding up the gang, who, with news and trade paper critics, spent a miserable hour viewing a piece of junk that is more trashy than one would imagine a picture could be.

And, at last, one of New York's better known independent distributors really becomes better known.

Joke

Another Joe Frisco yarn.

Abe Lyman, the band master, adorns a wall of the Chicago night club he's jazzplaying at. One night the scrubwoman lined up twenty or more cuspidors immediately under the portrait and proceeded to mop up the floor.

Just then Lyman and Frisco walked in. The latter, turning to the former, said:

"Say, Abe, w-w-what d-d-did you win the c-c-cups for?"

Hollywood Hears Le Baron Is On Skids; RKO Denies

Hollywood—Up and down the film bylanes are rumblings of impending changes at RKO. Joe Schnitzer's presence from New York is responsible.

The most persistent rumor is that William Le Baron has been given six months to step up picture quality or seek new fields to conquer elsewhere. Schnitzer, however, denies the report emphatically, declaring Le Baron's work to be most satisfactory and pointing out further that the producer's contract has several years to run. The gen-

Swanson Contract May Go To Schenck; Kennedy Ont

Hollywood—Possibility of Gloria Swanson switching from United Artists to M-G-M are growing slimmer.

The latest inside is that Gloria will remain on the U. A. program, but that financing for her pictures will be handled by Art Cinema and Joseph M. Schenck with Joe Kennedy passing out of that picture entirely. The deal, however, is not yet set.

Clarke Slated to Head Fox West Coast Chain

Hollywood—Harley L. Clarke is expected to have himself elected president of Fox West Coast Theatres shortly.

Oscar Oldknow, vice-president of Fox Theatres Corp., who is now in charge, will remain, for the time being at least, in charge of actual operations, but insiders have it the monicker of president will go to Clarke.

Vol. XLII NEW YORK CITY, OCTOBER 18, 1930 No. 16

PRODUCED BY WALL STREET; DIRECTED BY DOUGH

THE industry is about to have its face lifted and the plastic surgeons—self-appointed—are to be some of the most powerful banking interests in this broad land.

To the business, already pretty well entrenched financially, will come complete security as well as comfortable immunity from all dollar worries, but the price to be exacted for the assurance thus imparted will be the passing of control from film to banking hands. Long talked about and as often discounted, that day is at hand.

Big Fish Gobble Little

DOWN in America's money highway, far more is transpiring behind closed doors than the man in the street realizes. Last week three old, reputable and substantial banking institutions were saved from Stock Exchange suspension and probable ruin only because banks bigger and richer than those in jeopardy stepped in and pulled the hero act.

One large picture company would have been seriously involved and considerably embarrassed if relief hadn't come. Only it did, some money was transferred and a new banking influence, usually dominant in its operations, brought into this field.

Penetration, Nice and Peaceful

THE raids now fashionable along the Wall Street front may be expected to continue. With each new foray, the hooks which the financial giants are throwing out will sink deeper and deeper into filmdom's carcass until the time—no longer far distant now—when domination will be neatly tucked away in the hands of the nation's leading bankers.

It's all premeditated and carefully planned. If you break down American industry into its major banking sources, you will find the strings twined around a handful of fingers. Motion pictures shouldn't and won't be outside the pale. So the bankers think.

Sharpening the Axe for Slaughter

WHEN the set-up is perfected, many of the economic reforms so long aired and dropped will swing into line. You will find production jerked from complacent resting places in the financial heavens and trimmed to fit the niche it was always designed to fill. You will see bigger and, perhaps, better mergers; understandings between the major companies on theatre buildings and theatre operation and, if you live that long, a sifting of some of the water from stock passed on to a public once, but no longer, so gullible.

Where Yardsticks Don't Work

YOU will see some of the old, and many new faces, in high places, but all of them will dance to the tune whistled by the bankers. You may see attempts to operate the film business by a yardstick cut to measure for other businesses. And, reasonably, you may see the entire huge entertainment structure grow wobbly on its pins.

For the bankers have yet to learn that there is something in the celluloid make-up that doesn't respond to too scientific methods, granting that mountains of waste literally beg for removal. Show business which is the film business is unlike any other.

And unless the bankers remember to use their yardstick judiciously and carefully they may meet in this industry the Waterloo that has escaped them so far.

Tammany Pressure Compelling Walker To Sit Tight While Office Is Under Fire?

Walker to Seek Other Fields

The World | New York American

TIRED OF HIS JOB, MAYOR ASSERTS

"Glitter All Off, Somebody Else Should Have It"

NEVER AGAIN CANDIDATE

City Employees' Duties Overlap, He Tells Realty Men

"All the glory is gone, all the glitter is off"—these are James J. Walker's words, and they refer to his job as mayor of New York—"it is just a hard job, and somebody else ought to have it."

So he spoke last night at the Hotel Biltmore, addressing some 300 members of the United Real Estate Owners' Association. Explaining he realized the occasion was not one for political discussion, he nevertheless seized it to proclaim:

"I am not a candidate for office, and if you add, and you'll never be again,' I'll not contradict it. But

WALKER WANTS NO THIRD TERM

Mayor Walker, in a talk last night, declared he had no wish to run for office again, and especially for the office of Mayor of New York.

In the midst of a speech before the United Real Estate Owners' Association in the Hotel Biltmore he suddenly departed from his main theme, that of the city charter, and exclaimed:

"I am not a candidate for office at this time. This is not the time to make threats, but if you were to say 'or never will be again,' I would not contradict it. I have and have had no commitment other than the general interest of the city.

"All the glory is gone and all the glitter is off. It's just a hard job. Someone else ought to have it. I want nothing save to leave the city a little better than I found it. That's all I want to live on for the rest of my life."

The Mayor declared the city needs thorough revision of its charter "to meet present day conditions and not conditions as they were in 1840 and 1850." He invited his hearers to study the new

Close on the heels of the exclusive MOTION PICTURE NEWS story that he would resign his post on January 1 to join the legal staff of Fox Film, comes a direct statement from Mayor James J. Walker that he was tired of his job and was ready to pass on the mantle of office to someone else. His statement was quoted, and significantly played up, in The World and New York American on Tuesday morning and is considered, in some quarters, as an indirect confirmation of the Fox story, despite the mayor's vehement denial of a Fox affiliation to newspapermen.

'News' Story Denied by Mayor; Political Result Seen as Ruling Decision

Upon whether Tammany will consent to retirement of Mayor James J. Walker of New York at a time when his administration is under fire probably will depend his course January 1, and his proposed association with Fox.

Exclusive Motion Picture News report that the mayor is planning to retire from his office the end of the year and return to the industry as a member of the Fox legal staff rocked film and political circles.

Walker has made vehement denial of the story which was picked up by national press associations and the New York dailies. But it may or may not be significant that neither by him nor by Fox was Motion Picture News asked to publish the formal denial.

Opinion in inside circles persists that Walker's resignation would go through as indicated unless the Tammany chieftains decree otherwise.

Officially, Walker had this to say:

"There is nothing in it at all. It has not been suggested to me. I have no intention whatever of resigning for any reason. I deny it emphatically."

However, early this week, the mayor sounded what may be the tip-off, when in a speech he announced he was tired of political life.

"All the glory is gone, all the glitter is off," he asserted. "It's just a hard job and some one else can have it. I want nothing save to leave the city a little better than I found it. That's all I want to live on the rest of my life."

Walker has been ill during recent weeks and Tuesday was confined to his bed with a severe cold. In one quarter, it is stated that pressure may be brought to bear upon the mayor to prevent his reported retirement, because of a belief that resignation in January would be a reflection on Tammany, and lead to accusation he was quitting under fire.

William C. Michaels, Fox treasurer, told newspapermen he has heard nothing to indicate the mayor would join the organization.

mittee communications sent or received relating to their financial condition.

This recalls the charge made when receivership action against Warners was filed, that the suit was aimed to undermine the company's stock. Similar alleged motives are ascribed in circulation of other reports concerning picture firms.

Hollywood Hears LeBaron Is On Skids; RKO Denies

eral understanding here is that Le Baron has about 18 months to run on his current agreement which grew out of Radio's excitement when "Rio Rita" hit the home office some time ago.

In the meantime, variance in quality of the RKO output leads many to believe that Le Baron is very much on the spot.

Franklin on Vacation; RKO Rumors Persist

Hollywood—Harold B. Franklin, his wife and son, Elbert, leave this week for Canada. Franklin will spend the greater portion of his first vacation in fifteen years at Banff and Lake Louise, returning the first of the year. Before going Franklin said he had made no definite plans for the future and no announcement would be made until his return.

Rumors that the former theatre chief will go with RKO as head of theatres on the west coast persist. It is understood that an offer has been made him by RKO, the terms of which, however, have not been disclosed.

INSIDERS'

THE ancient studio rivalry between the Paramount plants, East and West, is expected to be largely relegated to the limbo of the forgotten under the new plan which places Ben Schulberg in charge of the New York as well as the Hollywood lot.

This is how it will work—at least, on paper:

Schulberg, in addition to his six figure salary per annum, gets a cut in profits. Paramount makes most of its products on the Coast. Which gives Schulberg full opportunity to check and double check on what's going on under his own studio roof.

Every time the studio in Astoria wanted a name for something or other to be shot in the East, the idea brought anything but cheers from Schulberg. Natural, too. Why dissipate his production resources? Of course, the line was never drawn too rigorously, for, after all and no matter what your slant, it was all ultimately on behalf of Paramount.

But, breaking the situation down into terms of East and West, Hollywood had a natural advantage over Astoria. And Astoria, as a consequence, often didn't do so well production-wise. Now comes the switch with Schulberg, with one or maybe both eyes on the profits which govern his slice at the end of the year, directly responsible for all celluloid activity. The result is stars will be shunted from Coast to Coast with far less fuss and considerably more speed than has prevailed until now.

East may not be West, but the idea at least gives 'em a chance to meet on a production parity basis.

Page the Idea Man

Something brand new in advertising hook-ups shortly is to be introduced in the industry, containing possibilities which almost stagger the imagination. The idea is being closely guarded by its sponsors, who feel they have something big and that a tip-off would send the racketeers into action to steal the idea.

The gag is a competitive one in theatres. It is more than the time honored drawing contest, for this one embraces real entertainment features which should spell sugar at the box office.

In fact, so radical and far-reaching is the idea, that one of the national distributors is angling to tie-in on the proposition, although the edge the arrangement would give the company might elicit squawks from Hays organization members. There'll be something doing on this proposition in the not distant future and it promises to be a whiz.

A Boner?

The best laugh of the booking season is Paramount's "big-hearted" deal to help out the Fox Brooklyn (opposition to Brooklyn Paramount) by letting the house play "Santa Fe Trail" day and date with the New York Paramount. Imagine the cash customers coming all the way over from Brooklyn when they can see the picture at 25 cents plus a whale of a stage show with about ten acts!

The Old Army Game

His company is large. Its interests many. The sales manager around whom this little yarn revolves isn't nearly so good as he thinks. Matter of fact, there are those who wonder how he manages to hold on.

Nice fellow and all that sort of thing, you know. But considered a featherweight for a job that is proving too heavy for him. Funny part is this chap, while he may not know it, suspects it and is governing his actions accordingly.

For instance, he is scrupulously careful about the type of manpower with which he surrounds himself. He sees to it that his minions pace their activities in tempo with his own capabilities for the obvious reason that he wants no underling to be in a position to show him up.

Amusing and peculiar as it all may seem, some of his executive associates are, day by day, becoming more familiar with the circumstances as they really are. How long the S.M.'s bosom friend, who sits in high places and is, therefore, in a position to cover his buddy's activities, will be able to keep the ax from swinging is a serious question. Time's growing short.

Do You Know—

WHAT erstwhile politician now in the film business is suffering from a serious case of hi-hat?

The producer who recently laid a million iron men on the line to induce a certain film man to divorce his wife?

What sales manager offered a high-powered job-seeker a post as salesman and what the job seeker told the S. M. to do and where to do it?

How serious is the danger that racial differences may leave their devastating mark on the escutcheon of the industry unless action to circumvent certain tendencies now creeping to the fore is speedily taken?

Why did a big timer return to New York less than a week after he had started on what was to be an extended vacation jaunt?

What the next merger is to be, who is to head it and what the Government will say about the procedure?

In what company is a request for a raise tantamount to a request for a resignation?

The Changing Times

Stars may twinkle in box-office firmament, but they're watching how and where they sprinkle their dust these days.

Time was when the marquee magnets held the producers by the scruff of the neck and made them dance to their heavenly music, but those days are gone forever. You probably remember some of the grief enjoyed by Paramount when Gloria Swanson and Pola Negri stalked the same lot. After a time, it got so the studio wasn't big enough to hold both of them.

Then the Paramount crowd stopped long enough one day to look itself in the mirror and determined that the temperament which, by tradition, goes hand in hand with histrionics, had had its hour. Not before, however, the company acquired sufficient theatres to make the gang in Hollywood understand that when it said hamming had to go, it meant exactly that.

There came the day when Paramount consequently determined it was bigger than any of its constituents. Swanson's contract ran out. Gloria thought she could dictate. Paramount disagreed and Miss Swanson joined United Artists. Later Richard Dix asked for something like $12,500 a week—every week—and Paramount failed to see the light. So Dix joined Radio.

Stars Do the Dancing

Whether or not the other companies are following in the wake of Paramount's example may be one of those moot questions. Probably the reason is that producers today are loosely agreed not to swipe each other's stars. Regardless of that, however, it is a fact that today stars do almost everything the studios tell them to do. And temperament is proving no longer fashionable.

The major companies feel they are in the big business class now and tomfoolery has no place in their operating scheme. Funny thing is that the Hollywood celebrities realize that times have changed and are trimming their sails in accordance with the wind.

Only recently, the proof of this was demonstrated on the coast. A female player, propelled into fame almost overnight, found herself in musical talkers because the studio felt it was the thing to do. She made one, then another and finally walked off the lot, declaring her talents were not being exercised to the full. Or words to that effect.

A Case in Point

The studio did nothing about it. Ditto, the player. In the meantime, several choice roles originally designated for the recalcitrant trouper were assigned elsewhere. Elsewhere Ruth Chatterton, from the New York stage, jumped to the fore over night. Joan Bennett, a newcomer, did some fast traveling toward the top of the heap. Helen Twelvetrees, Constance Bennett and Ann Harding, among others, began to make sizeable dents.

All this and more was observed by the player who perhaps made her decision too rashly. So back to the studio she went. There she cooled her heels until the studio chief felt it was strategically the time to see her. From that point on, the wrinkles began to be ironed out.

There's no secret about all this. The player is Janet Gaynor; the studio, Fox; and the executive who bided his time, Winnie Sheehan.

Sharpshooting in Stocks

One of the big names of picture business has been gambling plenty in stocks. So much so his manipulations are apt to draw the attention of the Department of Justice.

President Hoover is giving his attention to efforts to stop short selling, particularly when the shorts use questionable means to accomplish their ends. Beating down the price of stock through what may prove to be crooked methods faces some obstacles, and if the government goes in for investigation of this sort of thing, some very interesting details will be divulged.

According to the dope, this film name is resorting to tactics which may warrant criminal prosecution, if the theories of insiders is borne out. Viciously attacking the financial standing of any firm calls for a criminal reckoning, and this operator may be haled before the courts if investigation of his activities bears out current suspicions.

Should the government step in, the results may prove embarrassing, for a general probe of the stock market might be undertaken. In the case of the big name operator in question, such a probe would divulge a maze of questionable and, some say, fraudulent contracts and stock transactions which would shake the business to its oft-shaken foundations.

In the Balance?

Frank Whitbeck, showman extraordinaire and big cog in the Fox West Coast theatres wheel, may or may not return to his love of long-standing.

Frank is now on vacation. He may stay that way insofar as the circuit is concerned and, if he does, it appears from this tower that the decision will be his own of his own making.

Whitbeck is understood to have resented for some time interference in his publicity campaigns by the Fox studio. Felt they weren't in tune with his job and all that sort of thing. However, now that Oscar Oldknow has insisted that Fox West Coast operate on its own without studio dictation, wires from Hollywood indicate Whitbeck may decide to stay after all.

Stock Tremors

THE boomerang of last November is ricocheting all over Wall Street almost a year after the stock ticker first went crazy.

On the inside is the dramatic yarn of three brokerage houses, each important and far flung in its ramifications, which a handful of days ago faced suspension by the board of governors of the New York Stock Exchange because current assets were not sufficient to meet current obligations. One of these was a specialist in motion picture stocks.

If powerful allies hadn't been drafted into the situation on the one-two-three, this selfsame specialist would have fallen on sorry days and might easily have carried into the mire of speculation and frenzied rumor the film companies whose issues figured so largely in its business trading.

The financial aid, however, was forthcoming and what looked like a near-disaster averted by the narrowest of margins. But perspiration flowed freely and skipping hearts beat rapidly that afternoon.

NATIONAL Broadcasting Co. and Pepsodent aren't taking any chances that some other firm will cash in on the millions they have spent to popularize Amos 'n Andy. As a result, tie-ups of any kind, except with these two firms on RKO's "Check and Double Check," are definitely out

Radio Pictures had arranged a national hookup with the Underwood typewriter firm, but the legal department of NBC has issued a "no likee" edict and the tie-up has been, or will be, called off.

Use of stills on the picture is to be confined to lobbies, store windows, programs, magazines, etc., but in no case may they be employed with outside firms. Even special sections tied in with the 4,000 line ad to be used have been ruled out, for RKO is paying for the double truck space used.

Amos 'n' Andy are to appear simultaneously on screens of 300 theatres of the nation October 24. They will be on the RKO radio hour at 10:30 that night.

This means that RKO is taking no chances with the two blackface stars. It is figured that by breaking the picture in 300 houses on the same night the move will prevent the picture from being handicapped by any adverse comments by critical cranks, who may pick on the picture on general principles. RKO feels it has got two big bets and intends to hit while they're hot, and to strike all over the country at the same time.

Amos 'n' Andy on the radio every night have a national audience. It is figured that on the night of the twenty-fourth, with the two comedians directing listeners-in to view the picture, it should prove outstanding as a box office bet. Time, as usual, will write the next chapter.

Have a Piece of Throat

Plans for one of the most sweeping drives, aimed at losing houses and high overhead, have now reached the point where officials of Publix are ready to fire the opening gun. The move includes:

Wholesale closing of theatres, long in the red and impossible to place on a profitable basis; switching the policy of many first run deluxe houses from full week to split week programs; and last, but not the least by any means according to Publix employees in on the "dope," a salary cut which will start at the very top and include all in the organization with the exception of low-salaried employees.

The cut will take in practically every high-priced man and, from present indications, will mean exit for dozens of them who refuse to be consoled by promises for the future as an excuse for reduced income in the present.

Well, What?

What was the gist of the reply received by Frank Wilstach of the Hays' office to his complaint to RKO that the advertising used in Chicago dailies in connection with "On Your Back" at the Palace was a direct and glaring violation of the Hays' code of ethics?

Dodge Seen As Big Shot

How heavily Dodge's name will be linked with the Fox companies remains to be seen. Clarke's name may be kept in the ascendancy, but Motion Picture News learns authoritatively that Dodge will be a name to conjure with in the immediate and future conduct of those corporations.

Dodge, Clarke and W. S. Ingold, a partner in Pynchon & Co., control General Theatres Equipment, Inc., which, in turn, controls Fox Film and Fox Theatres. Ingold, in addition to Dodge, was added to the directorate of Fox Film at the company's annual meeting last Friday.

Another addition is Walter S. Hammons, of Portland, Me. and head of the company bearing his name. His banking affiliations are understood to be extensive.

John L. Kuser and Dryden Kuser, representing the Kuser family which figured in one of the receivership actions against William Fox in the now famous battle for control of the Fox companies, have likewise been made directors of Fox Film. They represent the largest minority interest in the Class B, or voting stock. Another addition is Charles B. Stuart, vice-president of Halsey, Stuart and Company.

Dodge, Ingold, Hammons, the Kusers and Stuart, as a group of six, have also been designated to represent the Class A common of Fox Film. This is non-voting stock.

The Fox Film directorate, as a consequence, now has been stepped up to 12, as provided for in the refinancing plan which was drawn up and executed last spring. The rest of the directorate was reelected and includes Clarke, Winfield Sheehan, Oscar L. Gubelman, Matthew C. Brush, Charles W. Higley and William Fox.

Another move in the Clarke camp provides for a reclassification of the capital structure of General Theatres Equipment. This company owns 50,101 of Class B Fox Film; 100,000 of Class B of Fox Theatres and about 1,000,000 of Class A Fox Film common. By virtue of these holdings, F. T. E. controls management of both Fox companies.

The New York Curb Exchange on Thursday admitted to trading new senior shares of G. T. E. issued to reduce the outstanding shares of common in re-classification of the company's capital structure. This provides for exchange of each voting trust certificate representing the common for one third share of the new $3 cumulative preferred and two-third share common.

Capital stock is to be reduced from 5,000,000 of no par common to 2,000,000 of $3 cumulative convertible preferred and 4,000,000 of common also of no par value. The new preferred will be convertible into common at four shares of common for each five of preferred. The preferred is subject to redemption at $52.50 per share. A quarterly dividend of 75 cents is planned on the issue.

Dodge: The Facts

Latest headline name to join the celluloid mighty is Murray Witherbee Dodge, newly-elected director of Fox Film Corp. He was born in New York City and he's 52.

He is a director of Chase Securities Corp., an associate enterprise of the Chase National Bank, one of the nation's biggest; Director of Continental Paper & Bag Co.; Colonial Gas and Electric Co., Newport Electric Corp., Central States Utilities Corp., City Utilities Co., Electric Shareholders Corp., Helena Rubinstein, Inc., United Dry Docks, Inc., Utilities Equities Corp., Eastern Texas Electric Co., El Paso Electric Co., Indianapolis Power and Light Corp., Antilla Sugar Co., The Larvex Corp., Central Petroleum Corp., Virginia Electric and Power Co., Engineers Public Service Co., and Utilities Power and Light Co. and General Theatre Equipment, Inc., the latter two enterprises in which Harley L. Clarke figures prominently.

Dodge has also had his fling in motion pictures. He financed D. W. Griffith to the tune of $1,500,000 for production of "Way Down East" and "Orphans of the Storm," found downtown bankers wouldn't take up the issue, formed Lee, Benoit & Co. and sold the stock directly to the public in a high-pressure campaign at from $15 to $25 a share. That's a few years ago. The certificates are worth about 50 cents a share today.

Fox Girds for A Battle with RKO in South

Dallas—Theatre building warfare, slowed up by the compulsory armistice dictated by business conditions, is to be resumed along this front with Fox moving in on a number of key spots where RKO has the upper hand.

James R. Grainger

Following the breakdown of negotiations for sale of the Fox product, RKO Southern Corp., which now operates the former Hoblitzelle Interstate chain, Fox is after theatres in Dallas, Fort Worth, San Antonio, Houston and other cities, and is said to have negotiations under way for purchase of a circuit.

Contemplated theatres which Fox plans to build in the four Texas keys will represent investments of about $1,500,000 each. Fanchon & Marco shows will be routed into these houses.

James R. Grainger, vice-president and general sales manager of Fox, will direct the invasion of Texas. He plans to visit Texas keys soon to make a first-hand study of the various situations.

Meanwhile, RKO has strengthened its position here through acquisition of the Capitol, which has reopened after remodeling, with Charles Webb as manager. Until Oct. 1 the house was operated by Ray Stinnett and Eph Charninsky, who operate the Palace at San Antonio. Universal formerly had an interest in the theatre.

Fox at one time had a deal set for purchase of the Hoblitzelle chain, but it was called off when the company got into financial difficulties. The theatres later were acquired by RKO. Karl Hoblitzelle still is operating head of the circuit with Lou B Remy as general manager. The circuit formerly ran Fox under a long-term franchise, which expired Aug. 31.

Allied to Make Practical Tests Of "Fair Zoning"

Specific tests to determine the extent of competition existing between theatres within a city, and between cities, in an effort to determine what constitutes "fair protection" may be conducted by Allied States Association.

This was indicated by Abram F. Myers, Allied president, at the recent meeting of the Michigan exhibitor association. He now is engaged on plans to apply the proposed test in various sections.

With the statement that protection should in no instance be more than commensurate with the existing competition as between definite situations, Myers declared that protection, heretofore, has never incorporated that principle.

"Systems of protection that have been in use in the past," he said, "have been founded entirely on theory. No actual or practical tests have ever been made in the interests of a system of protection to determine exactly what competition exists between theatre situations. Consequently, no accurate or genuinely fair protection document has ever resulted. In order to obtain such a document, independent theatre owners should make tests of actual competition existing between theatres and demand a protection system on that basis only."

Myers stated that the independent theatre owners are facing the crisis of their existence at this time. He urged them to support their sectional and national organization with everything they had, and to make no compromise in their fight for existence.

"You are now facing the test," he told them. "If you withdraw or fail in any particular you will never have another chance. The interests opposed to you will never again be obliged to listen to your demands, as they are obliged today."

Ungar, Canton, Gelsey to Run 'U' City Under Junior

Hollywood—One out and three in. In other words, with the resignation of Walter Stern as studio manager of Universal City, Carl Laemmle, Jr., has determined on a three-ply cabinet system composed of supervisors to handle pictures as well as general studio operations.

Arthur Ungar, newspaper man turned producer, Lew Canton and Erwin Gelsey comprise the cabinet. Stern was with the Laemmle organization for six years.

Hughes Says Deal's Off; Schenck Adds It Was Never On; Some Hold It's Close

The Wrong End?

Those in the know are wondering why United Artists began its overhead reduction process with the gang in New York when they say the Coast offers such golden opportunities.

Overhead Cutting Gets Under Way At U. A. Studios

The shears are being sharpened for an active season at the United Artists studio. Joe Moskowitz, vice-president of Art Cinema Corporation, is in Hollywood to see what can be done about reduction of operating overhead at the U. A. plant. It is understood his Coast stay will be indefinite, but long enough to make the cuts necessary to placate Joe Schenck's bankers.

The 10 per cent reduction instituted at U. A. headquarters in New York last week came about as result of investigations and analyses conducted by Moskowitz at Schenck's direct orders. The job is now considered finished so far as the Eastern end of the organization is concerned and, therefore, the Art Cinema executive now transfers his activities to the studio.

Van Beuren Denies; Reports of Deal Persist

A. Van Beuren yesterday branded as "false" reports of an impending deal whereby RKO will release the several series of shorts now going through Pathe, and forming a strong factor in the latter's short subject lineup.

Despite denials, the reports of the deal persisted in inside New York film circles, where it was stated official consummation would be expected within a week.

Jack Eaton, producer of Grantland Rice "Sportlights," a Van Beuren unit, likewise denied a yarn which credited him with quitting Rice to form a sports unit of his own to make four series of shorts.

Harold Lloyd Coming to "Feet First" Premiere

Harold Lloyd will come east to attend the New York opening of his new picture, "Feet First." It will open at the Rialto as soon as Gloria Swanson's "What a Widow" ends its engagement there.

Would Merge Theatre Firms

Merger of Shenandoah Theatres Corp. with Warner Theatres, Inc., is to be voted upon by stockholders of the former at a special meeting to be held Oct. 29.

"Angels" Producer May Yet Buy in Art Cinema—Stiff Asking Price a Bar

Howard Hughes insists the deal is off. Joe Schenck says it was never on, but those who analyze their picture deals declare that Howard may yet be Joe's angel in Art Cinema Corp., thereby aiding in solution of the financial difficulties facing United Artists.

"In other words," as one authority puts it, "when denials of an impending deal are made on all sides, you can bet it's either closed or will be soon."

Officially, what happened this week to the reports that Hughes was buying a substantial interest in Art Cinema was this:

Hughes, in a Hollywood statement to Motion Picture News, admitted he had been negotiating. "I was prepared to take over the Art Cinema Corporation," he said, "at a reasonable figure, but the price asked was beyond all reason in view of the unsettled and none too prosperous condition of the picture industry at this time. I regret we were unable to come to terms, but I can now say I am no longer interested in the proposition."

Dodges Art Cinema Story

Schenck told newspapermen there would be no change in control of United Artists and that Hughes or no one else had bought the company. In all of the multitudinous yarns floating through the trade anent Hughes, none had ever linked him with purchase of United Artists, but many did with Art Cinema. But Schenck made no reference to Art Cinema and technically, he, therefore, remains in the clear.

Interested with Schenck in the finance unit are three banking groups: Harriman National, Guaranty Trust and J. and W. Seligman & Co. The president of U. A. is understood to be able to deliver the stock interest in Art Cinema held by Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks and some of the other producing factors in United Artists. In the offing is Paramount with a $3,000,000 hold on the company.

Art Cinema Backs Mary, Doug

Recently Mary and Doug disbanded their own units and, the inside story goes, arranged for production finances through Art Cinema. The same company produces the Norma Talmadge pictures, those that Roland West makes and holds contracts with Chester Morris and Walter Huston. It is Art Cinema which holds a franchise for playing time with Publix and not United Artists, according to information supplied Motion Picture News.

If Hughes eventually closes his deal, he will purchase the Morris and Huston contracts, a franchise with Publix and the privilege of financing productions with Mary, Doug and Norma.

Long-Line Gag Was No Go with Howard Hughes

When, as and if Howard Hughes' Multicolor process threatens to divert the stream of gold from coffers of Technicolor into his own gravy dish, Technicolor, the king-pin in its particular field, will hear echoes of the alleged monopoly situation which was created in the earlier days of color in 1929.

Hughes, so the inside story goes, was one of the many producers in Hollywood who found themselves tied hand and foot insofar as the color problem was concerned, what with Warners having all available color-cameras sewed up, and Technicolor being unable to turn out cranks in sufficient number to appease the anger of units which fought hammer-and-tong for a color franchise.

Hughes was keenly disappointed when his request for color for "Hell's Angels" was flatly denied, and he swore, by gag, that he would never again find himself in a position where he would have to depend on Technicolor, or any other company, for color. He immediately set his agents to work on outright purchase of Multicolor.

Hughes, however, is not yet sold on color for regular theatrical entertainment, but those in on the know state that he is highly optimistic over its possibilities in the educational, industrial and their allied non-theatrical fields. He now has a staff out in the field to bring into the fold every available non-theat lab and industrial producer.

RKO and Tiffany Release Soviet Films, Is Claim

Portland—With or without the consent of RKO and Tiffany, two pictures released by these companies were Soviet propaganda pictures, M. R. Bacon, formerly a member of the communist organization and an expert investigator, told the congressional committee investigating Red activities in the United States. The pictures, he said, are "High Treason" (Tiffany) and "Loving the Ladies" (RKO).

Other Soviet produced films are in this country and being shown, especially where there is no censorship, he declared. One of these "The Krassian," was shown here. Bacon said he believed there were enough communistic propaganda films on hand in Seattle to show one a week for six months. Effort is being made to release these films through regular booking agencies, he declared.

Oong Boon Taat Gets Hep to Nice Bicycling Stunt

They ride bicycles in the Dutch East Indies, it is indicated by evidence unearthed by M. J. Weisfeldt of Talking Picture Epics. Weisfeldt recently received a request from Java for prints and advertising material on "Simba" and on checking up found out the picture hasn't been sold for that territory.

The Java correspondent declared he had purchased Dutch East Indian rights from Oong Boon Taat, who is distributing the picture in Singapore, Malay Straits and Indo China. Authorities in Java are investigating the alleged bicycling.

Oldknow and Sheehan Tilt On West Coast Operations

Hollywood—Two Fox vice-presidents crossed swords this week on matters of policy and, while the sparks never assumed serious proportions, the clash of steel resulted in a divorce of the Fox studio influence from the operations of Fox West Coast theatres.

Oscar Oldknow, generalissimo of the big Coast chain, has informed his staff to forget the studio and go ahead about their duties. Winnie Sheehan, of late at least, and in connection with "The Big Trail," "Up the River" and "Just Imagine," at any rate, has been giving the theatre organization pointers on ways and means to handle local premieres. That looks as if it's over now. Oldknow insisting the studio may be one imoortant part of the Fox ensemble, but that the theatre company also carries a good deal of weight.

Oldknow took a quick about-face during the week in connection with releasing for publication grosses of local theatres. An order went out on Tuesday to cut them out and another to continue, as was, on Wednesday.

E. B. Derr

Pathe president who is sponsoring policy of "fewer and better" pictures in his organization.

Pathe Limiting Output; Loans Stars to Others

Hollywood—He would rather have stars and featured players on his payroll idle than at work on productions of doubtful quality, states E. B. Derr, president of Pathe. The company head, who but a few months ago entered the production field, believes in limiting output to increase quality, which may account for the company's action in loaning its stars to other companies.

Constance Bennett, loaned by Pathe to Fox, scored her biggest hit and greatly increased her standing at the box office in "Common Clay." She is to be loaned to Fox for another picture. Ann Harding, another Pathe luminary, recently was loaned to First National for "The Girl of the Golden West."

Uses "Whoopee" Copy for "Rain"

Springfield, Mass.—Copy used by McVickers theatre, Chicago, for "Whoopee," was utilized almost line for line by the Bijou here for "Rain or Shine." The ad was headed with a cut of a revolver and the caption, "Here's a gun to shoot yourself," adding, "and you might as well if you don't see, etc." Even the subordinate copy on "Rain or Shine" closely paralleled the Chicago advertisement.

Smith, Raskob in Eddie Dowling Broadcast Tieup

John J. Raskob, Al Smith and William Kenny are reported associated with Eddie Dowling in Independent Disc Co., manufacturing records for radio broadcasts. The firm has made a broadcast record plug for "Outside the Law," Universal picture. The idea is a broadcast from a record of a sales talk on the picture.

Dowling acts as master of ceremonies introducing Paul Whiteman with a few wisecracks and then a couple of sequences of the picture are presented. The gag is for the radio station to play the record, with the theatre giving the station a screen plug in return.

U. S. May Act in Manipulation of Amusement Stock

Short selling of stocks on the New York Stock Exchange may result in a probe by the Department of Justice, Arthur Brisbane hints, writing in the New York American. He cites the case of one individual who has sold great quantities of an amusement stock short, and then wired all his branch houses that the amusement company's annual report was falsified, advising customers to sell the stock, that he might cover his short sales.

Fox, Loew's and Warner stock during the week have been the chief targets of bear raids among the amusement groups.

Decision to go in for Spanish talkers, it is stated, was made following Lichtig's recent trip to South America where he found sound installations proceeding at a record-breaking pace.

Yank Out Vaude, Picture Policy Doubles Intake

Chicago—RKO experienced the best week-end business in the history of its operation of the State-Lake, former vaude-film spot, with the change to a straight picture run house.

Average week-end business for the State-Lake with vaudeville and pictures has been approximately $9,000 for Saturday and Sunday. The two-day week-end gross on the straight picture policy was more than double that figure last week. "Half Shot at Sunrise" is current at the house which, on the new grind policy, is getting eight performances daily, as compared with five on the former vaude-film policy. Daily and nightly holdouts persisted over the week-end and into midweek.

The cream of the Radio product will go into the State-Lake and will be held just as long as the picture holds up, under the new policy. "Check and Double Check" is slated to follow the current picture, after which, according to present plans, "Danger Lights," photographed with Spoor-Berggren cameras on 70 mm. film, will go in. Installation of the Spoor projection equipment and the new wide screen was completed recently. This showing will constitute the first utilization of Spoor film and equipment in any theatre.

Last week-end also inaugurated RKO's 12-week bookings of name acts at the Palace, here. Ruth Etting headlined the bill at this vaude-film spot, which played to capacity business over the week-end.

Production Plans Guided by Market Needs; Sees Best Year Ahead

Tiffany is in the business to stay, and will continue its forward strides despite efforts of rumor-mongers to halt the company's progress.

This was the emphatic message from L. A. Young, company president, brought to New York by Grant L. Cook, executive vice-president, who has just returned to New York from the Coast, via Detroit, where the company chief makes his headquarters.

"We intend to see this thing through," summarizes Young's message to his organization, as relayed by Cook. The company's chief difficulty in the past has been the lack of product but this obstacle has been hurdled and the firm is facing its best year, Cook declared.

Cook attributed the various pessimistic reports concerning his company's future to Hollywood hangers-on, "with nothing else to do but rewrite the picture business," and a certain amount of malice.

Tiffany is gauging its product to meet what it considers the market possibilities, says Cook. The company is not trying to follow a "specials only" policy, but is aiming its product at both Class A and Class B houses. Its westerns, he says, are clicking generally, with the chimp comedies proving outstanding. As an instance of the effect of this policy change, he pointed out, "Extravagance," first picture on the new schedule, has been set in at Fischer's Theatre, Detroit.

Young Well Heeled

Drop of some stocks in Young's companies gave rise to many reports in the industry, but Cook pointed out the soundness of Young's position to emphasize his ability to carry out the program outlined for Tiffany. Young's Spring and Wire Co. has a ratio of 12 to 1 of assets and liabilities, $3,600,000 cash on hand or convertible into immediate cash. The stock has a book value of 20.5 and is on a $3 annual dividend basis. During the first nine months of this year, admittedly one of the worst in automo- in one of the receivership actions against

Two years ago, Young purchased the Walter Hagen Golf firm which was in receivership. The firm's factory now is working 16 hours daily and is yielding a "fine profit," so it seems that the Tiffany chief is pretty well heeled for the course he has charted.

St. Louis Strike To Be Carried to Film Exchanges

St. Louis—Film business here is anticipating something of a blow-up if exhibitors carry out their announced intention of fighting the musicians' strike to a finish. At the end of this week, unless a settlement is reached, operators and stagehands are to go out. After that, union men plan to call out shipping clerks, inspectors and other exchange back room employes, all of whom are organized.

Operators and stagehands were to have gone out last Thursday, but were ordered to stand by when Samuel P. Meyers of the musicians, requested a postponement from the international. This was granted by Louis Krouse, assistant to William Canavan in New York.

'Non-Union Union' Denies Threats Of Stench Bombs

Kansas City—The report that the Sound Projectionists Association had threatened to stench-bomb theatres employing union operators if houses employing non-union operators were annoyed with the bombs was denied last week by Denny Costello, owner of a suburban theatre and one of the organizers of the association.

"Our organization did not send out those letters and I don't know who did it," Costello declared.

The Sound Projectionists Association is a union of non-union operators. It was formed by operators and independent exhibitors to combat the local union. More than fourteen houses here are employing projectionists belonging to the "non-union union."

Work, Instead of Whoopee, Is Lot Of Coast Actors

Hollywood—Strange ideas about Hollywood prevail throughout the world and strangers come to the film capital expecting to find all sorts of weird spectacles. Melville Brown, RKO director of Amos 'n' Andy in "Check and Double Check," has been making a record of the peculiar impressions that exist about the people and the customs of filmland as revealed by visitors whom he meets from time to time.

Here are some of the idiosyncrasies of Hollywood as they exist in the imagination of some outsiders, as catalogued by Brown:

That actors and actresses spend their nights making whoopee.

That most stars come and go from the studios at their whim, leaving the rest of the company to await their pleasure.

That many actors cannot work before the camera until they have been "hopped up" with a drink of liquor.

That directors habitually shout profanity through their megaphones to get results on the sets.

That most of the stars have guards about their homes at night for protection against marauders.

That no woman can succeed in pictures without sacrifice of her self-respect.

That every good looking blonde on Hollywood Boulevard is a famous actress.

"It requires a stay of several days before some of these misimpressions can be shaken from the consciousness of our friends from afar," declares Brown, "but most of them leave with the conviction that Hollywood is a place where most everybody works hard and most everybody behaves himself."

Johnsons Film Wild Animals, Pygmies in Congo

Irumu, Belgian Congo—Forty thousand feet in sound and 20,000 silent have been shot to date by Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson. The veteran explorers have filmed crocodile, hippo and elephants in great numbers, all in sound. They now are on the Rutchuru plains, and next plan to go to the gorilla country. They expect to return to New York early next July. The sound equipment the Johnsons are carrying weighs about two tons. They photograph all day and recharge the batteries at night.

In the Itura forest, the Johnsons made pictures of the pygmies. They experienced considerable difficulty at first in making friends with the little folk, but with presents of salt and soap, gradually won their confidence until they had more than 500 camped with them. The pygmies the Johnsons found favor bananas and salt, so much so that they were obliged to bring in more than 500 bunches of bananas a day, obtaining them 100 miles away. Johnson also brought in a ton of salt and says the pygmies eat salt like American children eat sugar.

Ft. Wayne Makes It Tough on New Publix Theatre

Fort Wayne, Ind.—For the first time this city has resorted to drastic measures to compel a theatre to use electric current from the municipally owned plant. Recently a contract was signed whereby the Indiana Service Corp. was to sell current to the new Paramount theatre in course of construction. City officials declare many efforts had been made to obtain the contract for the municipal plant, but all failed, officials of the company owning the theatre ignoring three letters mailed to the New York office.

After learning that the private corporation had obtained the theatre's business, the city officials pointed out that the theatre is erecting a sign which is eight feet wide, contrary to an ordinance which prohibits signs more than six feet wide. Certain city officials are said to have promised that if the theatre would use municipal current, political pressure would be brought to bear so that the larger sign could be erected.

However, the Indiana Service Corp. already has spent $8,000 for transformers and other equipment and work preparatory to serving the theatre. It is said an offer was made to pay $8,000 and have the contract rescinded, but so far the corporation has shown no disposition to accept. Men erecting the sign have been halted by the police.

Sam Katz Divorce from Eleanora Is Confirmed

Reno—Through secret procedure, Sam Katz, Paramount Publix vice-president, was divorced from Eleanora Ambrose, dancer, here in July. All papers in the case were sealed by court order. Katz's first wife was Ida Balaban, sister of Barney Balaban. She died in 1923.

Katz married the dancer after a whirlwind courtship which followed their meeting when the star began an engagement at a Paramount theatre. Soon after the marriage, there were reports that a divorce was scheduled. He is said to have settled a fortune upon her.

Alimony Bugaboo Mars Del Rio Honeymoon?

Just a little matter of $3,500 is behind the suit of Gwendolyn Webber Gibbons against her art director husband, Cedric Gibbons, who recently married Dolores Del Rio to the tune of his wife's applause. Gibbons' alimony checks stopped suddenly, his ex-wife says.

Demand Still for Good Silents, Brecher Says

Silent films are "far from passe," in the opinion of Leo Brecher, veteran New York independent. The many requests received for revivals of outstanding pictures is proof of the fact, he says. Brecher operates the Plaza and Little Carnegie.

Fox Theatres to Lord Over the West; RKO, Paramount, Warners to Join Pool

Kid Stuff

Recognition of the fact that juveniles have been driven from the theatres by sophisticated and over-dialogued pictures led Paramount to embark on a policy of productions that will appeal to the vast mass of kids. It achieves this in "Tom Sawyer"—and how! And it's first-class entertainment for every age, sex and class, says Don Ashbaugh in his review, printed on page 59.

British Fans After Plenty Of "Meller"

Strong "meller" features and all-newsreel shows are the big magnets in England, according to Charles A. Stimson, of Big 4 Prod., who returned this week from a lengthy sojourn in London, where he completed plans for distribution of his company's 1930-31 product.

"Theatres are being built everywhere," Stimson told a Motion Picture News reporter yesterday. "And those few houses which have not already wired for sound pictures are rushing to cover.

"Picturegoers have taken to talkers in a big way, their favorite being of the strong melodrama type, such as 'Common Clay.' Newsreel theatres, and they are springing up everywhere, are drawing capacity houses. They clicked from the start.

"Miniature golf no longer enjoys the popularity which marked its first entrance into British amusement circles, and this chiefly because of the stiff admission fees of 50 cents which are being charged by majority of courses. They are usually built indoors, in department stores and restaurants, and no longer offer threatening opposition to picture houses," he concluded.

Stimson stated that Big 4 is the first independent company to successfully offer British exhibitors feature pictures on a cash rental basis instead of percentage playing.

Flaherty Planning Music Firm After Fox Ouster

Pat J. Flaherty, who has resigned as vice-president and general manager of Red Star Music Co., film music unit, exclusively told Motion Picture News that he intends to open a music publishing house of his own.

He is succeeded by Jay Witmark, one of the founders and until three months ago an executive of M. Witmark & Sons, Warner music subsidiary, and who is one of the six founders of the American Society of Composers, Authors & Publishers. A few weeks ago it was announced that Flaherty had signed a term contract with Red Star.

Cut-Throat Competition to Be Ruled Out Under Plan Being Discussed

Partnership deals with a split in operating profits and guarantee that their product will get a fair shake on the Coast may be the determining factors which will swing the RKO, Paramount and Warner theatres on the Pacific Slope under the Fox West Coast banner. The deals are now being torn apart and put together again by officials of the various companies involved in the proposed theatre pool.

Chances are that the move will be put over. If it is, there will go with it an understanding, probably verbal, that Messrs. Brown, Katz and Warner will lay off building or acquisition in the Fox West Coast territory which reaches from San Diego on the south to Seattle on the north and from San Francisco on the west to Kansas City on the east.

In other words, Fox will have the West or the Pacific Slope at least, to itself with its only competition whatever is left in the independent theatre ranks. The chain, now the most powerful on the Coast, will then find itself in a position that might mildly be described as impregnable.

Chicago Flapjacks Pack Sex Appeal

Chicago—A certain B. & K. executive, spotting sidewalk crowds near McVickers theatre one day this week, came smilingly down Madison st. to make a personal estimate of the holdout trade. As he neared the theatre, the smile rapidly changed to a frown of perplexity, then to disgust.

The crowds were gathered to watch a flapjack artist in the window of a restaurant adjoining the theatre.

"Why ain't them bums got something better to do than block the sidewalk," scowled the exec, turning on his heel and starting back to State st.

Cedar Rapids, Ia.—When the couple in a proposed stage wedding ran out on him, Manager L. E. Davidson, of the Paramount here faced a dilemma, but solved his problem by prevailing upon M. H. Nichol, manager of the Palace at Waterloo, to advance the date of his wedding. To help out a brother Publix manager, Nichol complied and the stage event went over as scheduled.

Warners Dedicate Prop Mountain And Wreck It!

The boner of a property man at Warners' west coast studio provides the climax for one of the week's funniest gags. It all started, to hear Sid Skolsky tell it, when some one, who hasn't anything better to do, roamed through Hollywood and discovered a new mountain. The mountain had been there since the beginning of time, but was only discovered in the year 1930.

The man who discovers mountains suddenly decided to become a mountain namer. He called it Mount Warner. Well, believe it or not, this soon was called to the attention of the Warner Bros.

"Ah!" they exclaimed, "a mountain named after us. We must christen it ourself with a fitting ceremony."

They marched forth to look at the great mountain named after them and to arrange for the ceremony. Looking over the mountain, they couldn't find a large rock on it. It was that kind of a mountain.

Jack Warner then returned to the studio and ordered the head property man to have a large rock placed on the mountain. Then an announcement telling the time the ceremony would take place was sent out.

The property man, accustomed to doing things in movie fashion, created a large papier mache rock and had it transported to the mountain.

The time for the ceremony arrived. A large crowd was there. Cameras were grinding away. Jack Warner made a speech. Then he lifted the bottle of champagne, said, "I now christen thee Mount Warner," and hurled the bottle at the rock. The bottle went through the papier mache rock and the ceremony never appeared in the news reels.

Boycott Trial Awaits Thacher Decree Appeal

Upon the outcome of distributors' appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court from the Thacher decree outlawing arbitration probably will depend decision in the case of the Majestic Theatre Co. of Hartford, Conn., against United Artists, Fox, Vitagraph and the New Haven Film Board, charging conspiracy in restraint of trade.

Federal Judge Burrows at Hartford, citing the Thacher opinion, ruled the contract is illegal in sustaining a demurrer filed by the plaintiff in answer to a special defense set up by the defendants. Upholding of this demurrer means the case will come to trial.

The case grows out of alleged boycott of the theatre by the defendants, after an arbitration award had been made against the plaintiff company. An alleged fake sale of the theatre property was the cause of the original squabble. General denial has been entered by the plaintiffs.

Argument on the appeal in the Thacher case is to be heard by the Supreme Court Oct. 27. Distributors are represented in this and the Hartford cases by Cadwallader, Wickersham and Taft. The Majestic firm is represented in the Hartford case by Robert P. Butler of Robinson, Robinson & Cole of Hartford.

O'Connell Dies on Eve Of Capitol Opening

Halifax, N. S.—There was a touch of tragedy in the passing this week of J. F. O'Connell, long an exhibitor of Halifax, N. S., just prior to the opening of the magnificent Capitol Theatre at Halifax of which he had been slated to be the manager. During strenuous preparations for the opening, O'Connell suddenly collapsed from a heart attack and gradually sank. Thomas Daley, Toronto manager, was rushed by Famous Players Canadian Corp. to take over the million dollar theatre and Daley will remain in Halifax permanently. O'Connell grew up with the moving picture theatre business, being the proprietor of the Majestic and other theatres over a period of years.

Pathe Location Blast

Flagstaff, Ariz.—Pathe's bad luck, which was climaxed in last year's studio fire in the East, caught up with the company on location here, when an ill-timed dynamite explosion injured 15 persons, two of them seriously. The two most seriously injured were local men, the others from Hollywood. Dynamite placed in the side of a cliff exploded prematurely.

Among those injured are: Howard Higgin, director, broken ankle, cuts; Bert Gilroy, business manager, sprained leg, cut on head; Walter Hoffman, powderman, broken leg, cuts; Hubert Morgan, helper, Flagstaff, broken collar bone; William Garrett, broken ankle, possible internal injuries; Jim Cunningham, back, head and legs injured, possible internal injuries; Morgan Peterson, ribs broken, possible internal injuries.

Avert General Strike in Philly By Compromise

Philadelphia—Musicians return to local theatres Oct. 24, following a compromise settlement signed at the offices in New York of Joseph Weber, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

Reaching of the agreement averted a sympathy strike by operators and stage hands. Under its terms 162 musicians will return to the orchestra pits of the Stanley-Warner and Fox theatres here and in Camden, N. J. The theatre owners had sought to reduce the number to 82 from the 245 originally employed under the contract which expired Sept. 1.

A contributing cause to the present situation of the musicians was Joseph Weber's order of last week that all musicians employed in radio stations, hotels, night clubs, restaurants, etc., go on general strike on Oct. 15 to enforce unionization of entertainment help in these places. This move followed directly after the musicians had called out the operators and stage hands in sympathy. Neither of these groups desired to walk out. The general strike was regarded as a counter move in the affair. Both walkouts were postponed for the time being. If Weber's order had been followed, practically every one of the 3,000 members of the Philadelphia musicians' local would have been affected instead of the little more than 200 touched by the movie strike. The protests of the local as a whole overruled the decision, and as a result, the operators and the stage hands continued in the movie houses.

M. P. Club Beefs and Eats Steak with Al Lichtman

Figuring its members should have an opportunity to razz their president and with an eye to the treasury as well, the Motion Picture Club tendered Al Lichtman a beefsteak dinner in club quarters Thursday night.

Married club members, always on the alert to spend an evening away from their spouses and with no office wives to draw upon, turned out in something resembling full force. The roving optics of one Motion Picture News reporter saw, among others:

Pat Garyn, Paul Lazarus, Arthur Kelly, Joe Brandt, Oscar Price, Leo Klebano, Louis F. Blumenthal, Alec Moss, Sam Blumenthal, Emil Jensen, Bruce Gallup, Sam Stern, Bert Adler, Jay Schreck, Sam Inselbuch, Lou Rydell, Jack Shapiro, George Fecke, J. J. Rosenthal, Billy Frankel, Al Gottesman, Myron Robinson, Toby Gruen, Herman Robbins, Harry Cohn and Lou Baum.

"Africa Speaks" Toned Down as Critics Squawk

Changes in the dialogue and press book and the insertion of a foreword to remove any ground for criticism of the picture as misrepresentation, are to be made in "Africa Speaks" by Columbia, the Hays office has informed the National Better Business Bureau.

The latter for some time has been investigating allegations that the picture was misleading, in that its treatment indicates that its sound sequences were made in Africa, states K. B. Wilson of the Bureau.

The foreword will make it definite that the picture was made purely for entertainment purposes, Wilson has been told. The Bureau is continuing its investigation to determine whether the title is misleading.

Some time ago various members of the Museum of Natural History criticised the picture from a scientific viewpoint, stating that it was so cleverly done its scientific import would lead to misunderstanding.

Nebraska, Iowa Unit Favorable To New Contract

Omaha—Favorable reception of the proposed new standard form of license agreement marked the meeting here of the Nebraska and western Iowa exhibitor unit. The draft of the proposed contract was outlined by M. A. Lightman, president of the M. P. T. O. A. Seventy delegates were on hand for the two-day sessions.

M. A. Lightman

It had been expected that Allied States Association would attempt to "move in" on the present association, forming a unit of its own during the convention, but its organizers changed tactics and didn't show up.

C. E. Williams of Omaha, veteran president of the organization, who was projected into the national limelight when he appeared as one of the principal witnesses against the Brookhart bill, was re-elected president for the ninth consecutive year. Myers, president of the Allied Association; H. M. Richey, leader of the Michigan unit; and Al Steffes, general manager of the Northwest organization, will be in Dallas for the October dates.

Wolverine State Approves New Standard Form, But Will Veto Guarantees

Detroit—Allied States Association will ratify the proposed new standard form of agreement, it is indicated by action of directors of the Michigan unit in approving draft of the agreement.

This move conforms with the exclusive Motion Picture News article of several weeks ago, which declared that considerations outside of the contract would not influence Allied's decision in ratifying or affirming the proposed agreement. This refuted claim that Allied might walk out on the proposed agreement due to the squabble over protection.

The Michigan organization accepted the new contract in an executive session held following the organization's convention at Grand Rapids. The organization is the first in the United States to ratify the proposed new form of agreement.

At the Grand Rapids sessions, the Michigan organization condemned guarantee and percentage bookings. No objection was voiced to the percentage system, but the meeting vetoed guarantees.

Myers Praises Kent but Warns Battle Still On

Battle Creek—In Sidney R. Kent, the independents have a man to whom they can bring their complaints in the certainty of receiving a hearing and fair consideration, Abram F. Myers told the Michigan meeting here. He cited Kent's attitude and actions during the 5-5-5 conference and on other occasions.

Sidney R. Kent

"But," the Allied leader said, "with the renewal of rezoning attempts throughout the country, judicial power in industry affairs has once again reverted to its old entities. You are obliged to fight for everything that is and should be yours."

Myers recounted incidents that occurred at zoning sessions throughout the country to support his statement, and emphasized particularly the tactics employed to gain the approval of a new zoning plan for Chicago and Illinois two weeks ago. Representatives in attendance at that meeting, he said, were asked to "initial" copies of the protection plan with the understanding that it was not to be a commitment of approval. When these were obtained, Myers related, it was announced by representatives of the Hays organization that the plan had been adopted. He lauded independent representatives at that session for withholding their signatures, thus blocking adoption of the plan, which he declared to be inimical to their interests.

Police Guarding Portland Houses In Union Row

Portland—Due to labor troubles between theatre owners and operators, and the increased activity of thieves who have recently specialized in theatre robberies, Chief of Police Jenkins and staff ordered that all suburban houses be placed under guard. Answering the gesture of the police department, one neighborhood house was almost bombed, and another was successfully robbed.

Miss Elma Running, cashier of the Granada, had left the structure only 10 minutes, when she heard a heavy explosion, and rushed out of her home in time to see a huge column of smoke arising from the rear of the theatre.

Police investigation disclosed that a charge of black powder had apparently been placed by the perpetrator and the "touching off" proceedings required little time.

"I have no serious trouble with organized labor," declared Stephen Parker, owner of the Granada. "Under the silent scale, which was $1.37 per hour, when sound was installed the union established a new scale of $2.22½ per hour, and demanded two men to be placed in the operator's booth. I agreed to that pending arbitration which began in April, 1929.

"Proprietors of independent theatres of Portland met with the operators and all agreed to arbitrate the matter. In August, 1929, however, they refused to arbitrate and pulled their men out of one of the theatres which was considered the 'bone of contention.' That action brought about a controversy involving the other independent theatres. As far as the Granada theatre is concerned, I never have had any arguments with the union and, although it has had a picket in front of the establishment, things have been very peaceful."

Chains Concede $2.50 Wage Boost

Seattle—Although the downtown circuit houses have settled with operators and stagehands, granting a $2.50 weekly increase, the smaller theatres are continuing their fight for only one man in the booth. Meanwhile, negotiations still are pending with musicians and houses large and small. The present downtown scale for operators and stagehands ranges from $65 to $85 a week. The agreement, effective in 1931, was signed by Fox West Coast, Paramount Publix, RKO and A. L. Erlanger Enterprises.

Zoning Plan Out In Ohio on Raps From Affiliates

Cleveland—Rewriting of zoning schedules for this territory is under way following rejection by home offices of the plan adopted by the zoning committee. The rejection was made because the representatives of the Loew, RKO and Publix theatres were not on the committee. Phil Gleichman, representative of the Warner theatres in this district, was the only affiliated theatre representative who attended the zoning committee meetings and Gleichman accepted the plan, calling it fair.

Fred Desberg and W. J. Finney of Loew's, J. E. Firnkness of RKO, and Louis Notarious of Publix were notified of committee meetings by registered mail, according to the local Film Board. They did not attend the meetings, it is stated, until the situations in which they were interested were already zoned. They then registered objections in each instance.

Affiliated Objections

Representatives of affiliated theatres, on the other hand, state that they had been informed that they would be notified when situations affecting them would come up for discussion, so that they could participate in the discussions and make known their demands. They were not notified, they claim, with the result that the zoning was completed without any participation by them. They were present at the final meeting of the committee when the plan was accepted by both distributor and exhibitor members. They then went on record as objecting to the clauses which covered situations in which they are interested.

It was understood by both distributor and exhibitor members of the zoning committee that the plan, when accepted by both parties, was final. It was not to be submitted to New York for approval. In the final analysis, however, New York assumed the prerogative of passing on it. Exhibitors had signed the plan with the complete understanding that it was final. It was submitted to New York only to be put into formal and legal form.

In addition to the above features, the Venetian also offered Steve Boisclair at the organ and the Venetian orchestra of 10 pieces. If the new policy succeeds, it is reported that Warners will offer similar programs at other theatres in this territory.

Boston's Houses Break Records As Legion Meets

Boston—This city is digging out from the American Legion national convention, which is reported to have spent something like three millions in Boston during the week and which left a sizeable share of its spendings in the theatre box-office. Boston had the biggest week in its history. There have been weeks when individual theatres have exceeded the week's totals which have just been piled up, but there has been no week when every theatre shared in the coin to such an extent.

The RKO Keith-Albee and Keith Memorial celebrated their birthdays with midnight shows on Sunday and the Metropolitan also staged a midnight show for the benefit of the visitors. All were packed to the doors and hundreds had to be turned away. Tuesday, the day of the big parade, there were a few spare seats during the early part of the matinees, but during the late afternoon the theatres were swamped with those who tired of watching the marchers and sought a few minutes to sit down within the theatres until lines were broken so they could get home. Every other matinee and night every playhouse was filled at every performance.

"Hell's Angels," in its sixth week, soared to 200 per cent and only lack of seats prevented it going higher. Metropolitan, with "The Sea God" and Buddy Rogers in person, hit 160%. "Half Shot at Sunrise" at the Keith Memorial hit 150%, as did "What A Widow" at Loew's State. "Monte Carlo," playing day and date at the Olympia and Uptown, did 145% and 160% respectively.

Estimated takings:

Indoor Golfettes

Madison, Wis.—Wisconsin theatres continue to take their miniature golf lightly for the most part. The formal opening of the first indoor miniature course in this city was mentioned in newspaper advertising in connection with which John Scharnberg, manager of RKO's Orpheum, Capitol and Garrick theatres here, co-operated to the extent of offering a free ducat to one of the houses to any one making the 18th hole in "one." The theatre award was incorporated in the course's formal newspaper announcement.

At Sheboygan, a miniature golf course, identical with the ones in the Congress Hotel and Medina Club, Chicago, will be installed in the basement of the Fox theatre. The course will be eighteen holes and is expected to be completed within the next several weeks.

Providence Gets Thrill as "Half Shot" Goals 'Em

Providence—Sensational business at the RKO Albee with "Half Shot at Sunrise," which hit $14,500, was the big noise for the week. Harry Storin, when he checked up Sunday night, found that the day's gross had topped even "All Quiet on the Western Front." And they continued to come for the entire week.

Loew's, with "What a Widow," was off from previous weeks, hitting about $18,000. "Liliom," Majestic, also failed to excite the mob very much and it was lucky to get away with $10,800. At the RKO Victory the receipts were around $9,000, not too tough. The Paramount was down with "The Spoilers," although Gary Cooper is a big favorite here.

Hectic political activities did their part to mar the sleep of exhibitors. The fair ones find it hard to find escorts these nights, with all the boys interested in rallies and caucuses.

Estimated takings:

"WHAT A WIDOW" (U. A.)

Opening Service Stations

Montreal—Northern Electric Co., Ltd., representing Western Electric in Canada, has announced the opening of seven spare parts depots in Canada, located at Halifax, Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Regina, Calgary and Vancouver.

Kid Player Helps "Golden West" to Lead Minneapolis

Minneapolis—Personal appearance of 12-year-old Mitzi Green, screen and vaudeville player helped to keep the Minnesota in the front lines of the percentage column during the week. Mitzi was not the drawing card that Buddy Rogers turned out to be, but she was appealing enough to give the business of the house the needed fillip.

A final fling of summer weather with some clouds and rain in the early part of the week and almost stifling heat during the last half cut into the box-office queues to a certain extent so that percentages were slightly lower than they have been up and down the line.

"Buzz" Bainbridge's dramatic stock company drew some attention with the announcement that Bainbridge would head a chain of stock theatres throughout the west and Northwest and because of some shifts in the company due to the new organization. There is a possibility that the new system may make more significant than heretofore the opposition offered by the Shubert house which has been the home of Bainbridge efforts for many years.

A poor showing of the Minnesota football team a week ago prevented the much touted Leland-Stanford game from amounting to much more than the usual annoyance to the box-office and this was probably evened up by the celebration spirit which pervaded the town after a 0 to 0 tie had resulted from a game expected to go Stanford by eight or ten touchdowns.

Estimated takings:

"GIRL OF THE GOLDEN WEST" (Warners)
MINNESOTA—(4,025), 30c-40c-60c, 7 days, 7 shows daily. Other attractions: Mitzi Green in person, Lou Breeze and his serenaders, "Gingersnaps" with Dick and Edith Barstow, overture, news. Gross: $22,000. Rating: 75%.

"Half Shot" with $15,000 Take Is Des Moines Wow

Des Moines—Wheeler and Woolsey in "Half Shot at Sunrise" not only held the high mark for the week at the Des Moines houses, but went far ahead of their previous records on pictures shown here at the Orpheum. The picture was judged as better than their others, not only from the comment of the management and fans, but the box-office recorded the picture as a 200% drawing card. "Three Faces East," with a very good stage show at the Paramount for the last four days, was rated at 120%. "Follow Through," at the Des Moines on a week's run, was scheduled at 160%; very good business. "Soup to Nuts," at the Strand, came in for some competition with the Orpheum comedy and scored 100% for the last half of the week. "Bright Lights" and "Scarlet Pages" each rated 100% business with, however, the comedies taking the edge on the romances this week.

Business Picking Up in St. Petersburg Theatres

St. Petersburg, Fla.—Several houses which have been closed all summer are dolling up for the winter season. B. H. Trumbull, manager of the Palace, who has been operating but four days a week the past summer, is booking now for the full seven days' run. The Patio is scheduled for re-opening this month. Harry Griffin, general manager of the four Sparks houses, says business is on the up-and-up. Three of his houses have operated all summer and the Plaza will be ready for opening as soon as business warrants.

Seattle—With a rating of about 160%, "Whoopee," at John Hamrick's Music Box, was the big hit of the week, keeping the small theatre packed to capacity at all performances. Top gross for the week went to the Fox Fifth Avenue, where "The Sea Wolf" took $12,900, but this was a rating of only 95%.

Business generally was off for the seven days. The Paramount, which has had some great weeks recently, took a bad beating with "The Bad Man," which grossed only about $10,000 (80%). "On Your Back" at the Fox Coliseum was retitled "Conscience" for some reason or other, and did only $3,250, while "Holiday," in its second week at the Fox, took $9,400 for a rating of about 95%. # 'Good News' Turns Into Bad News; Rest Above Par

Omaha—With the exception of "Good News" (M-G-M), at the State for three days, all houses hit par or better this week. The Metro musical comedy adaptation fell to 80%, while one of its featured players, Stanley Smith, was making a personal appearance at the World. Gross was only $1,800.

"Whoopee" brought laughs for thousands and $10,625 for the Paramount, which is a 125% week. Orpheum had a normal seven days with "A Lady Surrenders." Takings were $16,000, with Scooter Lowry and Charles Withers sharing the four-act billing.

Stanley Smith, who left a stock company here two years ago to try his luck in Hollywood, was welcomed "home" in a big way. With "Call of the Flesh" he brought the World $13,750 (125%), definitely establishing his picture house draw.

"One Romantic Night," last half at the State, got $2,750, or 110%. Weather was ideal—Indian summer at its height, and that's really something in this country.

Estimated takings:

Publix Prosperity Week Clicks in Tampa Houses

Tampa, Fla.—Harry Weiss, general manager of the five Publix theatres here, with the assistance of the managers of the different houses, put "Prosperity Week" over with a wallop.

Mayor McKay issued a proclamation on the week, all of the papers played it up big and the merchants boosted it. All of this was accomplished by the different managers and the theatres sold the idea to their patrons with trailers and special newspaper advertising.

'Whoopee' Makes Whoopee; $12,000 3rd Week's Gate

Montreal—The fans had plenty to talk about with "Whoopee" playing its third week at the Princess for $12,000 and 100% rating and held over for a fourth week. There was also excitement over the return of vaudeville at Loew's after the termination of the musicians' strike while the British talker, "Alf's Button," was good enough to be held over for a second week at the Roxy. Land-office business was registered with "Monte Carlo" at the Palace and with "Call of the Flesh" at the Capitol, this being the last week for straight pictures at the Capitol, by the way. Still another talking point was the reduction of prices at the Imperial, where a split week has been in vogue for a month, with a resultant increase in patronage. All in all, it was an exciting time.

Chief Justice Rose announced that he would hand down a written judgment because of the importance of the case. H. A. F. Boyde was the counsel for the appellants and W. F. Schwenger represented Ross T. Stewart, owner of the Lyric.

Brides' Blushes Get Ottawa Par; Remainder Below

Ottawa—Main line theatres of Ottawa gave a good account of themselves and there was not one picture which stood out above all others, the choice being fairly well balanced. "Our Blushing Brides" made it 100% at the Regent with bank deposits totaling $5,700 at the end of the six days, while "Love in the Rough" at B. F. ## Better Business After Dropping Vaude Bill

Toronto—With the dropping of vaudeville at Loew's, Manager Jules Bernstein has adopted Friday opening instead of Monday. The show starts at 11 A. M., an hour earlier in the day. Admission prices remain the same, scaling up to 65 cents with the show all on the screen—and larger business is being done.

Screen Policy in Duel with Revue; Film Gets $20,000

Toronto—Manager Jules Bernstern of Loew's put across a big exploitation campaign for the introduction of the all-screen policy starting Oct. 4 and packed 'em in from morn till night with "Our Blushing Brides" as "Hit No. 1" in the schedule. The result was that Loew's topped the town with a gross of $20,000, or 125%. The Imperial, with its new stage show policy, tapered to $16,000, equal to 90%, with "Old English," despite the local popularity of George Arliss. An extra stage show was worked in at 5:15 daily to stimulate matters. There were two British films on the list, with "Balaclava" playing the Royal Alexandra as a road show at $1 top, the result being a gross of $9,000, or $5,000 below "Abraham Lincoln" a few weeks before at $1.50 top.

Nathanson Boosts British Imports in Dominion

Toronto—Regal Films, generally regarded as an N. L. Nathanson unit, has been releasing more British features in the Dominion than the country has known in some time. "Atlantic," "The Hate Ship" and "Loose Ends," of British International Pictures, Ltd., are currently being booked.

Canadian interest is also being shown in "Alf's Button," new version, which played two weeks at the Montreal Roxy, "Splinters," "Balaclava," "Song of Soho" and others. Not so long ago, "High Treason" was being looked upon as a novelty as it was the first of the British talkers to reach Canada.

Theatre Shoots Own

Des Moines — The Orpheum is now equipped to take local pictures of interesting events. Pictures of a warehouse fire, and football games, and films co-operating with "Traffic Week" have been made recently. The pictures are screened at the evening show following their taking in the afternoon, reports Jess Day, manager.

U's "Lady" Soars To $20,700; Cops Chicago Honors

Chicago—Third week of top profits for three of the Loop's smallest straight picture houses. The Woods, with "A Lady Surrenders," demonstrated the power of a "pink" ticket in this town by picking up $20,700 (180%). "Melody of the Heart" (UFA) slid to $5,850 (178%) in its third and final week at the Castle, but kept the little house among the leaders, regardless. "Extravagance" (Tiffany) replaced in mid-week. "Abraham Lincoln" dropped a few hundred dollars at the Punch & Judy in its third week, but the house continues at near capacity for all three shows daily, the decrease being attributable to a reduction in prices. Matinee and supper shows are now at $1, and the top evening price is $2.

"Madam Satan" showed strength playing to adults only at McVickers, taking $25,000 (125%) in five days. The Chicago had a nice week with "Office Wife" (W. B.), which turned in $52,800 (110%), several dollars more than a lot of recent stage names have earned the house. "Whoopee" had a nice initial week at United Artists, getting $25,300 (115%), but showed signs of weakening toward the close, which means that its second week will be its last. Oriental took it on the chin for the fourth consecutive week, getting only $30,200 (72%) out of "Let's Go Native." The new week's business showed marked improvement, however, with Hack Wilson, Ki Ki Cuyler, Gabby Hartnett and Cliff Heathcote, Chicago National League baseball stars, on the stage, and "Top Speed" (F. N.), on the screen.

Barusch Heads Drive Against Daylight Saving

San Francisco—California's All Right League Against the Daylight Saving Menace has established a publicity department in the campaign against Daylight Saving to be voted on Nov. 4, and has placed Walter Barusch in charge. Every newspaper in Northern California is being supplied with articles and reprints of letters from prominent people opposed to the proposed law.

"Common Clay's" $6,940 2nd Run Hits De Luxers

Cincinnati—"Common Clay," which turned in the week's high as a first run at the Capitol recently, repeated the record as a second run at the Strand, only more so. With a seating capacity considerably less than its first-run sister house, and with new admission scale reduced to 25 and 40 cents as compared with 30 and 50 cents prevailing for the initial showing, the Strand broke its attendance, gross and percentage records, the previous top at this house having been made when the admissions were the same as at the first runs.

The Albee, showing "Outside the Law," with Ruth Etting heading the flesh and blood portion of the bill, did not maintain its customary high, and the gross was down considerably for the week. There was nothing in particular to account for this reversal of trend. Both the vaude and picture were good and received flattering newspaper notices from local reviews. It was simply one of those inexplicable "off weeks" which every house occasionally experiences.

"Half Shot at Sunrise" clicked heavily at the Palace, where the receipts and ratings shot upward, thus making up for the deficiency which this house experienced last week. For some unaccountable reason, Milton Sills, in "The Sea Wolf," did not attract the crowds expected at the Capitol, and the intake slumped to 20% below normal. The Lyric, with "Liliom," likewise took it on the chin, the fans apparently not being so hot for this type of entertainment. The week was off 13%. Second week of "Hell's Angels," roadshowing at the Shubert, went under its takings for the original seven days. The picture is in its third and final week.

The Family went away over the top with "Soup to Nuts" for the first half, and again with "Shadow Ranch" for the remaining seven days. Unusually hot weather was anything but a box-office stimulant.

Estimated takings:

"OUTSIDE THE LAW" (Universal)

Frisco Says "Oui" "3 French Girls" Take $45,000

San Francisco—Evidently M-G-M has a winner in "Those Three French Girls," for they rode roughshod over extremely warm weather the first three days, which sent many to the pee wee courses, to chalk up $45,000 at the Fox for a rating of 120%.

'Whoopee,' 'Abe' Get Top Dough In Philadelphia

Philadelphia—"Whoopee" and "Abraham Lincoln" opened strongly at the Boyd and Aldine, respectively, but grosses in general took a decided slump last week. There is no apparent reason, except that the public simply wouldn't "go for" the variety of entertainment offered.

"Maybe It's Love" at the Mastbaum took the count for $35,000, at least $5,000 off the usual average, while "The Last of the Duanes" rolled into the Fox for $25,000, under the house's average. "Animal Crackers," which claimed $22,500 for an opening week at Keith's, dropped to $16,000 for a second week—though the figure is still good and would have warranted a third week had not Paramount wished to move some more of its product in Philadelphia. On account of the scrap with Warners, Paramount has several pictures to release in this territory in a limited amount of time.

Reopening the Aldine, "Lincoln" got away for $10,000 for three full days, and a small fraction of the opening night, most of the house being given away on an invitation showing at the first performance last Wednesday night. The figure is good and bears promise of some substantial business for the picture, the first road show here since "All Quiet." The film has scheduled an extra showing at Saturday matinees each week at 5 o'clock.

Al. O'Keefe Takes Over Stout's Coast Exchange

Al O'Keefe, veteran manager of the Salt Lake City branch, has been transferred to the Los Angeles exchange, succeeding Jack Stout, states E. J. O'Leary, general sales manager. R. W. Drew, former salesman at the Denver office, has been advanced to manager at Salt Lake.

O'Keefe won for the Salt Lake City office the "Good Housekeeping" Trophy awarded by the Hays organization for the exchange keeping its house in the best order for the first six months of 1929. Since 1925, O'Keefe has been associated with PDC and Pathe. Previous to this, he was with Robertson-Cole, Metro and other companies. Drew joined the Salt Lake City sales staff in March.

Uses Diver Ballyhoo

Providence—A publicity stunt that is drawing crowds to the Victory Theatre has been devised by the RKO boys here in connection with the showing of "The Sea God." ## More Competition

Providence—Exhibitors now are facing not only competition of indoor golf courses, stock and burlesque, but the Steamrollers, professional football team, has taken to playing night games. Wrestling soon will start and prize fighting already has opened at the auditorium.

$24,500 Cantor Balto. Gross; But Jolson Nosedives

Baltimore—Backed by a large slice of a national advertising campaign in local newspapers, "Whoopee" knocked 'em for a row of box-offices at Loew's Stanley, the gross being estimated at $24,500, a rating of 140%. Not a dissenting voice was heard about the production. All appeared to like it.

Loew's Valencia also went way up the line with "Love in the Rough," the gross being figured at $4,100, giving a rating of 117%. The audiences enjoyed this picture hugely.

Another large gross was obtained at Loew's Century with Norma Talmadge in "Du Barry, Woman of Passion." The Talmadge name pulled strong, but the play is considered somewhat weak, although William Farnum was praised for his good work. The gross was estimated at $15,300 and the rating 83%.

The German language picture, "Two Hearts in Three-quarter Time," pulled strong during its second week at the Little with its 267 seats. Gross was $950, making the rating 95%.

D. W. Griffith's "Abraham Lincoln" was acclaimed by press and public and the gross was about $5,600, with two shows a day given and the top price at night being $1.50. The rating was figured at 70%.

A dark horse was "Up the River" at the New, which did pretty good and built as the week went on, when the public found out how good it is as a comedy. Gross was $7,500 and the rating 75%.

New Theatre on Warner Studio Site, Is Report

Hollywood—Boulevard chatter has it that the Warners are considering another first run, this time on the site of the Warner studio on Sunset Boulevard.

The plan is embryonic in the extreme and is linked with the scheme to combine Warner and First National production activities at the latter's Burbank plant. First both studios have suspended operations except for the limited number of foreign version talkers now under way, but when the Burbank lot opens in January it is anticipated forces will be merged and identities kept as is. The present Warner plan will be turned over to manufacture of Vitaphone Varieties and overflow, if any, on feature output with the proposed theatre to go up at what is now an undetermined date.

Engineers Battle to Untangle Involved Technical Mess of Wide Screens, Color

S. M. P. E. Convention Delegates to Hear of Drive for Better Sound

With preliminary stages of experimentation in sound definitely hurdled, engineers of the industry are already knee-deep in a battle with the technical obstacles which prevent general adoption of color and wide screens. This is strongly emphasized in early reports of discussions and papers planned for the fall convention of the Society of M. P. Engineers, which also reveal existence of a movement in technical circles to concentrate on an immediate improvement of sound equipment as used in studio, theatre and laboratory.

The engineers' convention, the 28th semi-annual confab, will open Monday morning at the Hotel Pennsylvania in New York, continuing until Thursday, during which 43 subjects on practically every phase of technical operation will be brought up for discussion. These include 13 affecting sound and sound equipment for theatre and studio; five for laboratory methods and procudure; four each involving theatre operation and studio mechanics, other than sound; three on color and the same number on international film problems; one involving television; an open forum discussion on methods of securing a large screen to avoid adoption of wide film; and the non-theatrical and numerous other fields.

Present Officers to Continue?

That engineers are giving serious thought to the placing of sound and picture on separate films is indicated by a sudden decision to debate advantages and disadvantages of this system to take place at the Tuesday session.

Annual election of officers is not expected to develop into a fight for leadership as first reported, with all political camps now understood to be favoring continuance of the present regime headed by President J. I. Crabtree, of Eastman Kodak. Crabtree is said to have been considering the new post of association manager and editor of its technical "Journal." The board of governors will make a selection for this post, following authorization of members, made at the spring meeting.

The society will establish its own headquarters in New York, following appointment of a manager.

Hollywood Undisturbed Over Grandeur's Advent

Hollywood—"The Big Trail," showing at Grauman's Chinese on Grandeur, is kicking up no new tremors of excitement over wide film.

The impression prevailed in some circles that the picture publicly shown on 70 mm. film might start anew discussions over wide film. The general reaction is that the large screen is interesting and worth watching but not revolutionary.

Box-office-wise, "The Big Trail" is off to an indifferent start.

Here's the Lowdown on Technical Problems Slated for SMPE Confab

Except for a committee report, wide film is ruled out at S. M. P. E. conventions until industry organizes on standard width. However, color, improved operation of sound equipment in theatres and studios and other technical factors will come up for debate. Highlights of papers to be read appear in abstract form below:

PRINCIPLES AND PROCESSES OF PHOTOGRAPHY IN NATURAL COLORS

By GLENN E. MATTHEWS
Eastman Kodak Research Laboratories

Almost from the first years in which motion pictures were used commercially, about 1895 to 1900, experimenters have been working on methods of producing them in natural colors. The only practical processes enjoying any extensive commercial use in the theatres, however, are subtractive processes in which the color is incorporated in the film. One additive process has had extensive application for amateur motion pictures for over two years. Within the past year a large number of color motion pictures have been released with sound accompaniment so that the ultimate is being approached in motion picture photography, namely pictures in color and sound. No practical methods of obtaining stereoscopy or relief have as yet been found. The subtractive processes which have been used, however, are only two-color methods and therefore a true spectral record is not realized.

Although a simple process of color photography yielding a print which faithfully reproduces the colors of nature is greatly needed, most of the research at the present time is being directed to the perfection of color motion pictures. Another equally important field is the use of color photography in photomechanical printing processes as colored illustrations have come into very extensive use during the past fifteen years. The work of different investigators may naturally be divided into (1) still photography including color photographs to be viewed by transmitted light and by reflected light, and (2) motion picture color photography.

(The discussion of the different processes as given in the lecture is prefaced by a description of the principles involved in the photographic reproduction of color.)

REQUIREMENTS FOR A PRACTICAL SYSTEM OF THREE COLOR SUBSTRACTIVE CINEMATOGRAPHY

By PALMER MILLER and P. D. BREWSTER
Brewster Color Film, Newark

Our paper first considers the necessary requirements in the camera—the comparison of advantages of using a single negative to record the three color separations and the use of three separate negatives—followed by a study of the advantages of using separate films sensitized for different colors, to aid in obtaining sharp separations in comparison to the use of panchromatic film and filters.

The question of the speed and the range of focal lengths of the lenses required in the cameras for practical use in the studios are considered.

Different possibilities for the production of the positive prints are then considered with special attention to dye mordaunting processes. Requirements as to definition of the image, range of color and clarity of color are discussed.

Paper concludes with a number of slides, showing curves of filters, curves of desired color separations and transmissions of H & D strips. The effect of superposing different color strips is demonstrated.

AN ENTERTAINMENT CITY

By R. N. GOLDSMITH, Vice-Pres.
Radia Corp. of America

Through planned cooperation by Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., it will be possible to erect a group of buildings in the center of New York City to serve as an Entertainment City. The various entertainment and educational enterprises housed in this city will be under the supervision and direction of the Radio Corporation of America and a group of its subsidiary companies primarily interested in entertainment in the theatre and in the home.

Close coordination between motion picture presentations on the stage, concerts, stage presentations of legitimate dramas and musical comedies, on the one hand, and record production and radio telephone and television broadcasting on the other hand, will be carried forward.

Improvements in Speakers and Studio Equipment to Be Revealed at Confab

The radio and motion picture activities will reach into the home and thus extend the influence of the Entertainment City to the entire country or even the world. The development of theatre construction and sound motion picture reproduction in the theatre which are planned are expected to lead to further substantial progress in supplying this form of entertainment to the public.

Numerous artistic and organization problems are anticipated, arising in part from the fact that the Entertainment City is probably the first instance in human history when thousands of artists and educators have been gathered together in a single community in order to place their offerings before national and international audiences both in the theatres and in the home. The opportunity of attacking these problems and perhaps contributing substantially to their solution is enthusiastically welcomed by those who have planned this highly unusual enterprise.

RECENT DEVELOPMENTS IN RCA PHOTOPHONE PORTABLE RECORDING EQUIPMENT

By P. M. ROBILLARD and E. B. LYFORD
R. C. A. Photophone

This paper describes in some detail the improvements which have been made in the RCA Photophone Portable Recorder since the publication (Journal of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, May, 1929, C. R. Hanna) of the original paper describing this equipment. The new optical system and galvanometer, which requires much less power for its operation, is described and illustrated both diagrammatically and by photograph. The new amplifier, considerably smaller and lighter than the previous one, is also described. Illustrations and electrical characteristics are given. This recorder is mounted upon a standard Mitchell camera and records by the Photophone variable area method. The complete equipment weighs 450 pounds, including carrying cases and all accessories.

SOME NEW STUDIO RECORDING EQUIPMENT

By W. P. DUTTON and S. READ

An illustrated description is given of some new input equipment for sound recording. This equipment provides for mixing the audio outputs of four or of eight microphones into the recording amplifier, which has two output channels.

Some of the interesting features of this equipment are:

(a) Constant impedance mixing, providing: constant load on each microphone amplifier for all combinations of volume control settings, thus giving unchanging fidelity; and, a constant output level from each microphone channel for all combinations of volume control settings in the other channels.

(b) Filter for eliminating low rumbles, caused by room vibrations, wind disturbances, etc., can be switched "on" or "off" at the mixer. This filter does not affect the fidelity above 100 cycles.

(c) Recording amplifier, having two output channels, supplying two loads with no interaction between them. Each channel has a convenient switching arrangement for changing the output transformer ratio, making possible the operation of one, two, or three 500 ohm loads in parallel.

(d) Each unit of the equipment is designed to mount on a standard relay rack or in an individual box equipped with handles for carrying.

The paper contains schematic diagrams, curves and views of equipment.

To Honor Inventors?

Honorary memberships for the pioneer inventors, Leory and Lauste, will be awarded by S. M. P. E. at its New York convention, it is understood. Internal squabbles among the board of governors has postponed action on these awards over a period of two years.

IMPROVEMENTS IN DYNAMIC SPEAKERS

By I. BOBROVSKY SERGE, Consulting Engineer
Utah Radio Praducts Corp., Chicago

Acoustical problems are considered on the basis of a point source of sound. The number of sound sources leads to a number of technical problems. One unit is ultimate solution, not yet reached. But necessity of fewer units is imperative.

Problem was to develop a cone type dynamic speaker which will have large power of ratio, so that the ideal conditions may be approached. Problems of developing cone dynamic speaker for auditorium use are numerous and I think most important one.

1. Increase of output results in increased size of voice coil.

2. Maintaining as high flux density in the air gap to obtain highest ratio between mechanical watts radiated to electrical watts input. This accomplished by developing an alloy with highest possible saturation point than material used at present time commercially.

3. Proper design of magnetic circuit which will develop maximum useful flux in the air gap for the total given flux. That results in selection of a set of dimensions to obtain minimum leakage flux. Substantial reduction of leakage are secured in design of new super dynamic speaker.

4. Increase of pole face to give a large and uniform density in the air gap. That will result in maintaining voice coil in uniform flux densities at all amplitudes to prevent subsequent variation in impedence that are detremental to conversion efficiencies.

5. Use of proper number of turns and resistance for the field winding of the speaker unit. Inasmuch fewer units are to be used, with the super type of dynamic speaker, higher field watts input are permissible.

6. Cone of dynamic speaker and its suspensions is a very important factor. Continuous experiments with cones and its suspensions produced a cone which is able to withstand high ratio of transfer of electrical energy to mechanical energy.

7. Proper coupling of sound producing unit with an auditorium is very important problem and use of baffle horn seems to be superior to the other type of coupling.

However, each auditorium presents special problem as far as size and dimensions of coupling medium are concerned.

Necessity of a super dynamic speaker which will reduce numerous technical problems is evident.

CONDENSER AND CARBON MICROPHONES—THEIR CONSTRUCTION AND USE

By W. C. JONES
Bell Telephone Laboratories

Of the numerous microphones which have been developed since Bell's original work on the telephone, only two are used extensively in sound recording for motion pictures, namely the condenser microphone and the carbon microphone.

The condenser microphone was first proposed in 1881 but owing to its low sensitivity was limited in its field of usefulness until the development of suitable amplifiers. In 1917 E. C. Wente published an account of the work which he had done on a condenser microphone having a stretched diaphragm and a back plate so designed as to introduce an appreciable amount of air damping. The major portion of the condenser microphones used today in sound recording embody the essential features of the Wente microphone. Marked progress has however been made in the design and construction of these instruments with the result that they are not only more sensitive but also more stable. The factors which contribute to this improvement are described in detail in this paper. Recently a number of articles have appeared in the technical press calling attention to certain discrepancies between the conditions under which the thermophone calibration of the condenser microphone is made and those which exist in the studio. The nature of these discrepancies and their bearing on the use of the microphone are discussed.

Microphones in which the sound pressure on the diaphragm produces changes in the electrical resistance of a mass of carbon granules interposed between two electrode surfaces have been used commercially since the early days of the telephone. In recent years the faithfulness of the reproduction obtained with the carbon microphone has been materially improved by the introduction of an air damped stretched diaphragm and a push-pull arrangement of two carbon elements. This instrument is finding extensive use in sound recording and reproduction fields where carbon noise is not an important factor. The outstanding design features of the push-pull carbon microphone are described in this paper and suggestions made as to the precautions to be taken in its use if the best qaulity, maximum life, etc., are to be obtained.

INDUSTRY ADOPTS THE MOTION-PICTURE CAMERA

By ALLAN H. MOGENSEN, Assistant Editor
Factory and Industrial Management

"The greatest waste in the world is that occasioned by useless and wasteful motions." So said Frank B. Gilbreth almost twenty years ago. Interest, long confined to very few, is now rapidly increasing, and many industries are looking to motion study to help eliminate as much of this waste as possible.

Motion study is not a speeding-up process. Instead, it seeks to find the one best way of doing work, which is usually the easiest method. Extremely valuable in this work is the motion-picture camera, and the simplicity and low cost of 16 mm. film and equipment has greatly accelerated its adoption by industry. In the past, micro-motion study was a complicated laboratory study, but now even the simplest of amateur cameras may be used to advantage. A brief description of the method followed in making an analysis of an operation will aid in visualizing the technique.

The operation to be studied is photographed, including in the field a fast-moving clock. This clock, known as a micro-chrono-meter, records simultaneously with the various motions on the film, time to the 1/120,000 hour. Use of the fast lenses now available with 16 mm. equipment permits photographing an operation by natural daylight or requires only a few simple incandescent lamps.

After the film has been developed, it is analyzed by projection on a small screen, one frame at a time. Study of the film—a slow and laborious process—enables the analyst to drawup a "simo-chart"—(simultaneous motion cycle chart). This is a long sheet of cross-section paper, on which the motion of each part of the hands, wrists, and arms is plotted against time. The micro-motion analyst breaks all motions down into seventeen fundamental motions—called therbligs (Gilbreth spelled backwards). These are represented on the simo-chart by colors and symbols.

Study of this chart reveals violation of the laws of motion, and a new and better method of doing the job can be synthetically constructed. When taught to the operator, this method—the one best way—makes possible greatly increased production with the same or less effort.

Lately an attempt has been made to simplify the method of eliminating the micro-chronometer. Running the camera at a constant speed results in a definite time record being impressed on the film. That is, if the camera speed is 1,000 frames per minute, then each picture will be one-thousandth of a minute later than the preceding one—and a ruler becomes the time-measuring device.

Micro-motion studies have been in some industrial plants for many years, but with the impetus given this technique lately, it is rapidly being adopted by even the mass production industries. One large department store has been making motion studies for some time. For training new workers the film method is of inestimable value. The effects of motion study are going to be tremendously far-reaching; and within the next years few industrial plants will exist that do not use it in one form or another.

THE MADALER PROCESS OF SOUND RECORDING AND REPRODUCING

By H. VON MADALER
Hamptan Bays, L. I.

After 10 years of experimenting the writer has succeeded in producing an entirely new talking film of a quality equal to the systems now in use, and also having several advantages over these systems.

First, the recording can be immediately reproduced as soon as it is recorded and can be played over 250 times without losing any of its quality; second, it is not necessary to reduce the size of the picture frame as is the case of the present sound photofilm systems; third, any colored film can be recorded successfully and oil, dirt and scratches on the film do not affect sound reproduction.

The record groove on this new talking film is exactly like the Victor record. The depth and width is about two thousandths of an inch and this record is impressed with a diamond point which is half round on the point. The film is also reproduced with a similar point.

Recording has been successfully achieved on a standard film 35 mm. with a speed of 90 feet per minute and also on a 16 mm. film at a speed of 24 pictures per second or 36 feet per minute. A thorough test in recording was made in the experimental laboratories of the Eastman Kodak Company at Rochester and it was found, with the help of an oscillator, that there was no difficulty in recording frequencies from 50 to 5,000 cycles on a 16 mm. film which has a two and a half times slower speed than the standard 35 mm. film. This film has now sufficient quality to be put on the market.

For recording the sound waves there has been constructed a very simple machine which consists of a sprocket of about 1¾ inch diameter which is mounted on a shaft on one end and a suitable flywheel on the other end. This flywheel is driven from a synchronized motor in the usual way. For reproducing a similar device is used and an electrical pickup is employed for reproducing the sound.

There has been constructed a specially made electrical recording unit which is more powerful than any other recording unit as much more power is needed to engrave in a celluloid film than in a wax record. The film is recorded in its ordinary cold state and no preparation is necessary for recording on the film. For recording on the standard film a 4 stage double push-pull 250 tube amplifier is used and for reproducing this same amplifier can be used also.

For reproducing and recording a 16 mm. film a 4 stage 245 push-pull amplifier is used with very good results.

It is hoped that this new system will be used universally in all theatres and homes on account of its simplicity, manufacture and operation; and also because the cost to produce this film will be much less than that of the present systems now in use.

A 16 MM PORTABLE SOUND ON FILM PROJECTION EQUIPMENT

By C. R. HANNA, P. L. IRWIN and E. W. REYNOLDS
Westinghause Electric, East Pittsburgh

A portable sound on film projection equipment using 16 mm. film is described. The film is standard with the exception that one row of sprocket holes is omitted to provide space for the sound track.

The projector is only slightly larger than the average silent picture projector. Detailed description of its mechanical, electrical, and optical features is given.

The complete equipment is mounted in three carrying cases, one for the projector, one for the amplifier, and one for the loud speaker and screen. The projector case serves also as a sound proof housing when the equipment is in operation. The rewind, splicer, cables, spare tubes and lamps, and the films are located in the case for the loud speaker and screen. Each of the carrying cases weighs approximately 40 pounds, making the total weight of the equipment 120 pounds.

CINEMATOGRAPHIC ANALYSIS OF MECHANICAL ENERGY EXPENDITURE IN THE SPRINTER

C. A. MORRISON and W. O. FENN

The average college sprinter in the 100-yard dash utilizes oxygen at a rate which is equivalent to the production of 13 H.P., according to the results of physiologists who have been studying the problem. With the aid of the high speed motion picture camera, an analysis has recently been made of the actual mechanical work done by these runners, who were picked at random from the gymnasium classes of the university.

From this investigation it was found that only about 3 H.P. are returned as mechanical work which could be accounted for by the movements of the various parts of the body. This makes the human machine only 23% efficient.

By measuring the displacements of the body structures as they appeared when projected on a screen from over 2,000 separate film pictures, it has been possible to compute the velocities of the arms and legs during their swings. The results showed that more than half of the mechanical work was required to swing them and that 0.7 H.P. was expended to stop them at the end of the swing, making a total of 2.4 H.P. utilized in the arms and legs. The overcoming of the resistance of the feet making contact with ground required 0.4 H.P., while wind pressure and gravity accounted for 0.2 H.P.

CINEMATOGRAPHY WITH THE LARYNGOSCOPE

By C. A. MORRISON
Eastman Teaching Films

A new technique for making motion pictures of the vocal cords has been developed by the use of a quartz rod as the means of projecting a high intensity illumination within the larynx. The source of light consists of the two filaments of an over-volted automobile bulb. A laryngoscope, illuminating system and viewing finder are attached to a 16 mm. motion picture camera. This combination forms a self-contained, one-man-controlled diagnostic unit, which permits motion pictures of the cords to be made at the standard rate of 16 frames per second. The field photographed is viewed constantly through the finder by the operator, who controls the spring motor of the camera by the usual release button. The pictures as projected fill the entire screen area. This is a magnification previously unattained under these conditions.

SOME CAUSES FOR VARIATIONS IN THE LIGHT AND STEADINESS OF HIGH INTENSITY CARBONS

By D. B. JOY and A. C. DOWNES
Research Laboratories, National Carbon Co., Cleveland

The effect of the variation in the relative positions of the positive and negative carbons in a commercial high intensity lamp burning 13.6 millimeter carbons is investigated. The futility of specifying an arc voltage without fixing the position of the positive carbon with respect to the negative carbon is illustrated. It is also demonstrated that a relatively small movement in the position of the positive carbon crater along its axis has a greater effect on the steadiness and quantity of useful light from the high intensity arc than is ordinarily supposed. The positions of the carbons at which maximum light and the maximum steadiness of light are obtained are defined, and it is shown that for the same current the position of maximum light is not necessarily the position of maximum steadiness.

DOUBLE TONING OF MOTION PICTURE FILM

By J. I. CRABTREE and W. MARSH
Kodak Research Laboratories

Commencing with the black and white image on motion picture film it is possible to color this by purely chemical means so that the color of the half tones is different from that of the shadows, while the highlights remain clear. One method of accomplishing this consists of toning the image in the usual iron toning bath omitting the potassium alum and dye toning the image by immersing in a solution of a basic dye in the usual manner. The half tones assume the color of the dye while the color of the shadows is a combination of blue and dye employed.

An alternative method consists of toning the image blue in the usual toning solution, fixing in hypo, washing, and then re-toning followed by immersion in a solution of a basic dye. In this way the first toning bath converts the silver image to a mixture of prussian blue and silver ferrocyanide, the reaction going to completion in the half tones but incompletely in the shadows so that some of the silver is unaffected. The silver ferrocyanide is removed in the hypo solution leaving an image consisting of pure prussian blue in the half tones and a mixture of this substance and silver in the shadows. On re-immersion in the blue toning bath, the silver in the shadows is again converted to a mixture of prussian blue and silver ferrocyanide which latter substance is a mordant for basic dyes, so that on immersion in a dye solution the dye is absorbed only to the shadows. The result is an image with green shadows and blue half tones.

SOME SUGGESTIONS FOR ELIMINATING THE FIRE HAZARD FROM THE HANDLING AND STORAGE OF FILM IN LABORATORIES

By R. C. HUBBARD

Wherever Nitro-Cellulose Film is stored or handled there is ever present the danger of contact with a spark or flame starting a conflagration so rapid and intense that there seems to be no known method of extinguishing it. If fire is not isolated it will spread so rapidly that operatives cannot escape the premises in time. If large quantities of film are exposed in small improperly vented rooms explosive gases will accumulate and disastrous explosions may occur.

When one considers that a fair sized laboratory may easily have in process and in its storage vaults ten million feet of film and this is equivalent to twenty-five tons of Nitro-Cellulose, we shudder to think of the forces involved and we believe that the fates have been kind that no really serious loss of life has occurred through laboratory fires. The burning and decomposition of film may give off several poisonous gases, such as Carbon-monoxide, Nitrogen-dioxide, Nitrogen, Carbon-dioxide, etc. Carbon-monoxide is fatal and is almost instantaneous. Nitrous gases are also fatal, but the victim may not feel the effects for days or even weeks later.

It is worthy of note that the "Cleveland" Hospital Fire in which one hundred and twenty-five lives were lost, involved only four and one-half tons of Celluloid films. We believe that the locating of laboratories in congested sections of a city should be avoided. A recent survey of laboratories around New York showed a number in the heart of the business district a number in residential sections and a few in the outlying districts. Nearly all are located in Multiple Story Buildings. Considering the almost instantaneous spread of film fire, we believe this to be a very dangerous condition.

There seems to be no known method of extinguishing a fire of rolled film. The ordinary fire fighting equipment such as; water pails, sand pails, pyrene and guardene extinguishers, are as useless as a "ham sandwich" at a feast. Experience shows that the only salvation is to isolate the fire and a good sprinkler system with ample supply of water will accomplish this in the best known manner. We should also provide ample free vents for the gases. The design and construction of the building should be such that fire is confined to relatively small spaces. Let us consider how best to eliminate the above mentioned fire and life hazard from laboratory operation.

1st—Building should be located with free space on all sides and have no direct connection to other buildings.

2nd—Building should be one story so that emergency exit may be immediate and directly to free space.

3rd—Departments should be separated by fire walls, with automatic self closing fire doors.

4th—Each department should have sufficient emergency exits opening directly out to free space to afford immediate egress of all operatives.

5th—Each department should be provided with temporary storage vaults sufficient to handle all film in process.

6th—Each room and vault should be provided with automatic vents sufficient to provide free passage of all gases.

7th—All mechanical operations such as polishing, waxing, processing and projection should be isolated in separate rooms.

8th—Laboratory units should be kept to a minimum size so that no more than one-half ton of film shall be in one department at any one time.

9th—Shipping and receiving department should be isolated or in separate building with proper temporary storage vaults.

10th—All electric panel boards should be kept outside work rooms and in space where no film is stored or handled.

11th—All electric fixtures and switches should be of vapor proof type.

12th—All permanent storage vaults should be isolated from all other buildings.

13th—All buildings should be equipped with modern automatic sprinkler system with adequate two source water supply.

14th—All vent openings and automatic doors should be operated by rate of rise of temperature control.

15th—Lay out of plant shall be such that economical and efficient operation may be obtained.

16th—Proper metal cans shall be provided so that all film not actually in process may be enclosed.

17th—Film in workrooms shall be deposited on small operating trucks (not on racks) so it may be readily moved to temporary vaults when not in use and at close of working period.

With these principles in mind we have planned laboratory units which we term "Safety First Laboratory."

REDUCING SOLUTIONS FOR MOTION PICTURE FILM

By J. I. CRABTREE and L. E. MUEHLER
Kodak Research Laboratories

To date few satisfactory formulas for reducing motion picture film which had satisfactory keeping properties have been available. To new satisfactory formulas have been evolved one consisting of a mixture of ferric ammonium sulfate and sulfuric acid and the second a modification of the Belitzski formula which contains a mixture of ferric chloride, potassium citrate, sodium sulfite, citric acid, and hypo.

Use of Two Solutions in Lab Practice Will Diminish Tendency to 'Overwork'

The Farmers Reducer when used as two separate solutions is quite satisfactory and with negative motion picture film produces an almost proportional degree of reduction whereas with positive film the effect is that of a "cutting" reducer. The properties of the various reducers are fully described.

For the intensification of motion picture film a modified chromium intensifier is recommended. The film is bleached in a mixture of potassium bichromate and hydrochloric acid and is then redeveloped in an ordinary developing solution. Control of contrast is obtained by varying the time redevelopment. This method of intensification produces permanent images.

PECULIAR ENGINEERING PROBLEMS IN THE 16 MM. FIELD

By EDWIN C. FRITTS
Eastman Kodak Co.

Previous to the introduction of amateur motion pictures, the appeal of the equipment which the engineer was called upon to develop and manufacture was not made for the public at large but rather for the theatre management who in turn used it to sell amusement to the public. As a result, the man on the street knew nothing of the function or appearance of the motion picture equipment which furnished his evening's entertainment.

The task of the engineer working on amateur motion picture equipment is decidedly different, in that the apparatus which passes from his hands must necessarily make its appeal directly to the popular fancy, since it is chosen and purchased for personal use. The appeal of the equipment may accordingly be divided into three parts: results on the screen, cost, and appearance. In the first place, the customer has some basis of judgment as to what he might expect, and will require in the main equivalent results to those to which he has become accustomed in the theatre. In appearance he has no prejudged opinion, but compactness, weight, and finish are of major significance, especially in the camera, since it is carried about on journeys or during recreation periods and is as much a part of the personal appearance as the golf bag, luggage, or milady's hand bag. Furthermore, the question of cost places this equipment in an entirely different category from that of the professional theatre. As a result, the engineer working in the field of amateur motion pictures finds that it is only in the main technical features that his work has any common ground with that of the engineer working in the professional field.

A DAMPED DIAPHRAGM REPRODUCER

By RUDOLPH MIEHLING
Universol Sound System, Phila.

This paper deals with a new type of speaker recently perfected which differs from both exponential and cone type horns and yet retains the best features of both. It is termed the Damped Diaphragm Reproducer because of the peculiar construction of this portion of the instrument. It employs a large, metallic diaphragm rigidly attached to a heavy iron ring. The dynamic driving system is attached to the center of the diaphragm and serves to actuate the diaphragm. The diaphragm, which is made of duralumin, .002 of an inch thick, is not stretched on the ring so its natural period of vibration will be above audibility. The tension on the diaphragm is such as to place its resonance point within the audible range.

To prevent resonance at this particular frequency the diaphragm is damped by attaching strips of balsa wood so placed that its response is constant throughout the audible range. By the proper arrangement of damping strips, adjustment of air gap and diaphragm tension, it is possible to tune the speaker so that it will have a rising characteristic as the frequency increases or a falling characteristic as may be most desirable under the conditions met with in its use.

Its wide range of frequency response and its characteristics over that range enable this speaker to meet easily all demands of the sound projection field. Its high efficiency and permissible power input as well as its wide distribution characteristic make it desirable from the standpoint of economy, both in lowered amplifier output and reduced number of units necessary for given sound level. To these must be added the factor of naturalness or fidelity of output. This can only be determined by hearing tests but when a speaker produces sound that is easy to listen to and unobtrusive, these requirements have also been met. On all points then, the damped diaphragm reproducer promises better sound at less cost.

TWO-SOLUTION DEVELOPMENT OF MOTION PICTURE FILM

By J. I. CRABTREE, H. PARKER and H. D. RUSSELL
Kodak Reseorch Laboratories

The idea of developing a photographic image by successive immersions in two separate solutions is by no means new. A large number of workers have investigated the effect of starting development in a weak developer and according to the manner of appearance of the image, development was continued in either a restrained, normal, or a very active developer. In the case of negatives exposed under widely varying conditions of lighting, such a method appeared to have merit.

Other workers have claimed that in the case of an under-exposed negative, of a contrasty subject, if the negative is first immersed in a developing solution which does not contain alkali (A) and is then placed in a second solution containing only alkali and sulfite (B), the quantity of developer absorbed by the film in A is sufficient to insure adequate development of the shadows in B whereas in the case of the highlights, the developing power of the developer is exhausted before full development is attained. In this way, good shadow detail is obtained while the highlights are not overdeveloped.

These methods of development have been applied to motion picture film but none of the effects claimed have been observed, that is, the two-solution formulas give essentially the same type of image as a single solution. The two-solution method of development, however, has certain advantages as follows: (1) There is less loss in emulsion speed on exhaustion; (2) it is possible to adjust the formula of the first solution so that enough fresh developer is carried over into the second developer to insure replenishing of the latter so that a uniform rate of development is maintained; and (3) it is possible to compound the first solution with a desensitizer so that the film can be carefully inspected in the second developer with a reasonably bright light.

It is considered that the use of two solutions in practice would diminish the tendency to

TREND OF LAMP DEVELOPMENT AND OPERATION IN MOTION PICTURE PROJECTORS EMPLOYING 16 MM. FILM

By V. J. ROPER and H. I. WOOD
General Electric Co., Cleveland

More exacting use of the motion picture projectors employing 16 mm. film has led to demands for higher illumination. While fundamentals of optical system design limit the light source size and hence wattage, higher illumination than that given by present projectors is possible with tungsten filament Mazda lamps of relatively lower voltage, higher current rating, and also with more efficient optical systems. Highest illumination in present equipments is produced by a 250-watt 20-volt lamp. The optimum lamp, a higher wattage, low voltage type, necessitates a bulb of larger size and hence some change in optical design. Optical efficiency of present equipments has been sacrificed to gain compactness and portability. Some systems use less than one per cent of the light emitted by the source whereas it is possible to use over two and five-tenths per cent of the total. Therefore the combination of an optimum lamp and an optimum optical system offers much higher screen illumination.

Low voltage lamps practically necessitate transformer operation. It is suggested that transformer equipped projectors be provided with a changeover switch to permit the use of 115-volt lamps on direct current. A voltmeter should be provided across the secondary of the transformer and a variable rheostat in series with the primary to insure that the lamp receives its proper voltage.

A NEW AND SIMPLIFIED 16 MM. PROJECTOR AND CAMERA

By C. E. PHILLIMORE
Peka, Inc., Chicago

This paper deals with a simplified 16 mm. projector for home use which is well within the range of the average pocketbook.

The first problem in designing this projector was to obtain a source of light which would be concentrated enough, sturdy enough and give sufficient illumination without emanating heat enough to injure the film.

After examination of all the lamps available the low volt standard automobile headlight lamp was found to give as ideal results as was possible to obtain. An efficient transformer was developed to operate the lamp from the regular 110-volt 50 or 60-cycle supply. Where A C current is not available a standard 110-volt 50-watt tubular lamp can be mounted in the same base and gives excellent results.

A direct optical system was perfected, making the entire optical system as compact as possible. The final result obtained proved to be remarkably efficient due to the low loss of light in transmission.

For the intermittent movement a single cam movement was developed which had the additional advantage of feeding both forward and backward. Although this is not the fastest action available, it proved to be fast enough and had the advantage of reducing wear and tear on the film.

The frame of the machine is constructed from a white brass aluminum die cast alloy. The motor is mounted on a bracket that is easily detached so that by changing the lamp, in addition the machine may be adaptable to almost any current supply.

For operating from 200 to 250 volts 50 or 60-cycle current, a special transformer was developed which fits into the base of the machine. By substituting the motor with one to operate from the same voltage the machine becomes very desirable for use in foreign countries.

In addition to these regular types there is available a 32-volt lamp together with a 32-volt motor, making it attractively useful in rural districts. It is apparent, therefore, that any current supply can be readily accommodated.

Bowes to Sound Gavel At Convention Opening

When the Fall meeting of the S. M. P. E. is called to order at the Hotel Pennsylvania, New York, Major Edward Bowes will make the welcoming speech in behalf of the industry. Association leaders are scheduled to follow him on the rostrum.

Between 375 and 400 delegates are expected at the confab, the social highlight of which will be the banquet Wednesday night where leaders of all important distributing companies will speak, led by Will H. Hays.

Membership Increased To 735 Film Engineers

Membership roster of the S. M. P. E. has jumped to approximately 735 delegates, the Fall convention will be told. They are divided as follows: About 329 in Eastern states, 80 on the Pacific Coast, 86 in midwestern states, and about 240 in the New York section. Chicago, Hollywood and New York each boast of a separate organization, all of which are under direct supervision of the parent body.

Hollywood Next and Then London for 1931 Confabs

Hollywood is expected to play host to Society of M. P. Engineers in May, 1931, when the organization assembles for its 29th semi-annual convention. London is slated for the 1931 Fall meet, according to present plans.

Kids Get Break

Huntingdon, Que.—Quebec law bars all children under 16 years from picture theatres but the kids living near the border line of Quebec and New York State don't care. A few miles over the line are Chateaugay and Malone, N. Y., where they can see a picture show any old time. The Ideal Theatre at Chateaugay, N. Y., is making a special play for Quebec's juvenile patronage with a 10-cent admission charge. And the fact that children are welcome is being advertised in the newspapers of Huntingdon and Ormstown on the Quebec side.

ESTABLISHED . . . .

LEADERSHIP

The world's largest motion-picture theatre utilizes ALL the improved B. O. headliners and plays them up for all they're worth. So, when a Technicolor picture comes to the Roxy, up goes "Technicolor" in the lights.

In one short year Technicolor has risen to the top. Made records—and broken 'em. And made 'em again! There's just one answer. Color keeps the B. O. busy. The tremendous increase in Technicolor business brought its problems, too. Print orders increasing way out of proportion to original plans. Last minute orders coming in all the time. But now, in addition to our Boston plant which is running overtime, there is also a big, new Hollywood plant, now going full tilt, to meet the ever-increasing demand for color. Technicolor is preparing itself in every way to serve a motion-picture future bright with color.

FOR EXAMPLE . . . . Seven times as much Technicolor was used in June 1930 as in June 1929

Syrian Theatres Are Modernizing Their Equipment

Washington — Complete modernization of equipment, particularly projection machines, is the current trend in exhibition circles in Syria, where, according to Dept. of Commerce reports from J. H. Keeley, Jr., American consul, there is a marked move toward German apparatus.

Until about two years ago, states the report, practically all of the theatres in Syria used Pathé projectors, but now all the more progressive theatres, which cater to the higher-class clientele, employ a Krupp-Ernemann projector with a Zeiss lens. Only two theatres in Beirut, out of a total of seven, are known to be using Pathé projectors. In Damascus one theatre uses a Krupp-Ernemann and another uses a Pathé machine, while in Aleppo there are two Pathé and one Gaumont machines in use. During the summer only, a theatre at Aley, a resort in the Lebanon, uses a Gaumont.

The Krupp-Ernemann projectors are sold in Beirut for $632. The usual terms are 25 per ecnt with order and the balance against documents in Beirut, but shipment against documents has been made. Pathé sells for $321 against shipping documents in eBirut, while the Gaumont machines are shipped on consignment and are offered at $440.

Aside from the requirement that the projection should be clear, steady, and silent, no other quality is required. None of the theatres in operation in the territorv under French mandate has more than one projector, which necessitates the almost perfect functioning of the machine in use if interruptions are to be avoided.

The market for projectors being relatively small, there are no dealers in the district specializing in such equipment. Some dealers in optical instruments have been selling a few portable projectors, such as the Pathé Baby. Several of the dealers have also brought in non-theatrical types for sale to local schools and missionary institutions. So far there has been very little demand for projectors for home use. Theatrical types of projectors are not carried in stock, but are handled by commission merchants, who show their catalogues to interested parties and book orders therefrom.

It is estimated that there are not more than 25 projectors in the whole territory under French mandate. Five of these are known to be of the latest model, while others are old. American makes of projectors are practically unknown in this market. The American University of Beirut recently bought an American projector, but it is understood to be a non-theatrical type and can not favorably compare with the latest models of German machines now in use in local theatres. With this exception, which does not react favorably to American machines, theatrical types of American projectors have yet to be introduced.

Generators.—All local theatres are already equipped with generator sets to convert alternating current to direct current. Local theatre owners would not consider replacing the sets they are using until they are no longer serviceable. They would then doubtless follow the usual practice of ordering a new set through a commission merchant, and European manufacturers would doubtless get such orders because they are able to deliver with less delay than are American manufacturers. There is no prejudice against American generator sets, however, and if the local representative of an American manufacturer were to carry a few in stock he might easily monopolize the sale of replacement generators. The possibiilties of the market are, however, very small.

Arc Lamps and Screens.—All local theatres are using high-intensity and mirror-reflector arc lamps and white cloth screens. Silver screens were once tried but were found to be unsuitable, the complaint being that the reflection was too great.

Visual Education.—The following Government representatives have under their supervision matters pertaining to education: Conseiller pour l'Instruction Publique, Haut-Commissariat, Beirut; Ministre de l'Instruction Publique, Beirut; Ministre de l'Instruction Publique, Damascus; and Directeur de l'Instruction Publique, Latakia.

In addition to these Government representatives, who have general supervision of matters pertaining to education, the president of the Foreign Educational Institutions might be advantageously approached.

Visual education is not generally practiced in Syria. There is given below a list of the large educational institutions which have projectors and which occasionally show some educational films. Purely educational films are usually on some special subject, such as botany or zoology for students studying those subjects. Anatomic films are sometimes shown by the American University of Beirut to its medical students.

Prospects Bright for Camera Sales, Says Gov't

Washington—While present conditions prevent large purchases, the camera market in Palestine may be expected to show radical strides in near future, according to a report from Jerusalem by Oscar Heizer, consul.

The market in Palestine for amateur cameras is very small indeed. The country is not rich, and the greater part of the inhabitants are peasants who live in villages and have simple needs, although the inhabitants of the larger towns and cities, such as Jerusalem, Haifa, and Tel-Aviv, are more prosperous; in these towns are to be found a number of foreign residents, Government officials and others.

Cameras were first introduced into Palestine several years ago by American and other tourists who visited the country and took pictures of the various points of interest. Later, some of the local camera and photographic- apparatus dealers displayed in their show windows a few of the machines, with a view to making their use more familiar in Palestine.

For the convenience of the tourists who carried such machines with them, the local film dealers began to stock film for those cameras, and some of them have installed apparatus for developing the film and preparing a positive print from it. At present one can purchase in Jerusalem standard size film as well as 16-millimeter film. Amateur projectors are also sold.

At the present time electric current for supplying these projectors is available in Haifa, Jaffa, Tel-Aviv, and Tiberias, and will in a few years be extended to other towns and cities in Palestine.

The current at Haifa, Tiberias, Tel-Aviv, and Jaffa is 3-phase, 50-cycle alternating at 220 and 380 volts. For apparatus of a load value not exceeding 1-kilowatt either single-phase current at 220 volts or 3-phase current at 280 volts is supplied; for bigger loads and for motors 3-phase current 380 volts is supplied.

Algeria Market Split Into Four Theatrical Units

Washington—American vice consul English, headquarters at Algiers, reports that exhibitors in Algeria are adverse to installation of American projectors because of high price and their supposed complicated operation.

The market for equipment in Algeria is dependent on four classes of users: the regular picture theatres of which there are about 50 in the colony, the native and open-air shows, the traveling picture show for small and remote localities, and the hire section for occasional shows and generally for purposes of demonstration or propaganda.

Projectors.—Three makes of projectors are in use. The cheapest and most widely used make is the Pathé, which costs complete about $150. The Gaumont projector sells complete at $195. The firm Krupp-Ernemann sells for $355 complete. The Ernemann is classed far above its competitors in all respects. Since Germany is credited with being the inventor of the special reflector and horizontal carbon system, the Ernemann projector is valued for its high-quality material and fabrication and also for the simplicity and ease of its operation.

Three theatres are said to be operated with American projectors. The only objections to them, apart from high price, are that they are more complicated in their operation than the others.

Principally owing to the existence of the hire system, theatrical projectors are stocked only by firms directly engaged in the film industry. Projectors for other uses are stocked by certain dealers in photographic, electrical, and radio supplies.

The regular theatres are equipped with two projectors each. Competition is sufficient to insure that they are always of the latest obtainable model. Elsewhere, in native and traveling picture shows, the age of the apparatus depends on the resources and individuality of the owner.

Generators.—The current in general use throughout Algeria is 110-volt 3-phase alternating, which has to be converted to about 65 volts direct. The generator set in almost universal use is the Thomson Houston (French). The possibility of introducing machines manufactured in America, given reasonable efficiency, (2,100,000), which represents 92 per cent of the entire population of the country, is still Arc Lamps and Screens.—All the better-class theatres use high-intensity and mirror-reflector arc lamps. The carbons chiefly in use are German. Screens are made of either canvas or metal. They are quite an inexpensive item, and are sold by Pathé and Gaumont.

Visual Education.—With reference to the employment of motion pictures in education, it may be noted that Algeria is divided for purpose of administration into three Departments, Algeria, Oran, and Constantine. In each of these there is a "Conseil Departmente de l'Instruction Publique," of which the prefect is ex officia president.

At present visual education by means of motion pictures is almost unknown. Those experiments which have been made have so far ended in lamentable failure. It is quite possible that the methods of approach were defective.

The industry of Tunisia is developing satisfactorily, and as electric energy is extended throughout the country (it is still confined to the largest centers), numerous theatres are sure to be opened. Also, the Arab population depends entirely on considerations of price. Freight costs and customs duty are the two items which inflate the selling price of the machines made in America.

Before the "Mike" In N. Y. Studios

WHEN the train from the Coast, which might have been called "The Paramount Special," pulled into New York early this week it included in its "White Cargo" Walter Wanger, Sam Jaffe, West Coast production managers; Ernst Lubitsch, associate producer; Frank Tuttle, who will direct Clara Bow in her next vehicle; George Yohalen, assistant to Tuttle; Victor Milner, cameraman; Franklin Ansen, sound engineer for West Coast studios; James Wilkerson, West Coast head of the cutting department; Lothar Mendes, who will direct "Ladies' Man" here; Herman Mankiewicz, Max Marcin, Ernest Voyda and Samson Raphaelson, writers, and Jesse Lasky, Jr. Clara Bow and Stuart Erwin arrived on a later train.

Nancy Carroll's next opus, tentatively titled "Two Against Death," has been renamed "Stolen Heaven" and goes into production the first week of November under the direction of George Abbott. Nancy is at present making personal appearances at local theatres.

Inactivity at the Paramount New York studio brought to mind a picture of an old famous theatre, living in the glories of the past. But in three weeks. Ah! Again we shall hear, "hold those hammers," "silence," "up to speed," orders indispensable in the production of pictures.

But the short subjects must go on. Two shorts have been made this week; one, called "The Antique Shop," a comedy featuring Burns & Allen under Ray Cozine's direction, and the other, "Ship Ahoy-Oy-Oy," another Smith & Dale comedy under the direction of Howard Bretherton.

Typical New York exterior shots, including automats, subways, elevated, Times Square and docks, to be used in the new Clara Bow picture, will be made next week under the direction of Frank Tuttle.

Judea Films, Inc., has finished another seven reel all-Jewish dialogue feature entitled "Eternal Fools" at the R. L. A. studios on 38th St. Sidney M. Golden directed, Sam Rosen was behind the lens and Louis Schwartz edited the film, under the supervision of Joe Seiden.

Ilka Chase, who recently was on the Paramount New York studio lot, has been added to the "Once a Sinner" cast, the new Fox picture which soon will go into production under the direction of Guthrie McClintic. "Once a Sinner" is an original by George Middleton, Fox associate producer.

Frank Orth, comedian credited with about a dozen Vorieties, added another one to the list when he made "The Painter," which Alf Goulding directed. Helen Nord plays a prominent role in this one and shows promise of becoming a "find."

* * *

In addition to Orth's reappearance at Warner's Flatbush studio, were another pair of Vitaphone veterans, Mr. and Mrs. Jack Norworth, who were to make another one of "The Nagger" series, Murray Roth's favorite laughgetter. This latest was entitled "The Naggers' Day of Rest," the only one resting being ye scribe who found a very comfortable Morris chair back of the cameras.

A. D. Otvos, Vitaphone staff writer and Broadway first-nighter de luxe, wrote "Opening Night," a one-reeler which was included in the production schedule. PINCUS.

Rochester Girds For Fight Against Daylight Saving

Rochester, N. Y.—Plans to battle the daylight saving movement, which will be voted upon in a referendum at the November election, are under way, backed by the sentiments of theatre owners throughout the district. The referendum, if passed, will make the one-hour daylight saving plan a permanent thing in Rochester.

Julius Greenstone, president of the Rochester Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association, last week was reported about to confer with the leaders in the movement relative to backing the campaign. Leaders are planning radio publicity and house to house pamphlets to kill the daylight saving plan.

Although no figures are available as to what the fast-time plan cost the picture theatre interests this summer, it is known to have been plenty. Miniature golf courses and amusement parks, on the other hand, benefited.

Harris Assumes Duties; Warner Zone Manager

Pittsburgh—John Harris has assumed his new duties as zone manager of all Warner theatres in Pittsburgh, succeeding J. Reeves Espy, who goes to St. Louis in an executive capacity assisting Charles Skouras, zone manager there. Harris sold his circuit of theatres in Western Pennsylvania to Warners. After the transfer he was for four months at the Warner home office as executive assistant to George Skouras.

Plans Concert Tour

Rochester, N. Y.—Benjamin Prestiani, lyric tenor, who recently returned from the University of Milan, began a concert tour of the country last week prior to signing up for a series of song shorts with "Miss Italy," also touring the country after an engagement with Roxy in New York.

Mexican House Opens

Mexico City—This Republic's first house, especially built for sound, opened here. Known as the Balmorri, the theatre is located on Avenida Alvara Obregon, and is situated a considerable distance from the theatrical district. American sound equipment is installed.

Going Back on Stage

Hollywood—Basil Rathbone is to return to New York to appear in a stage play produced by Arch Selwyn, following completion of Rathbone's work in "Sin Takes a Holiday."

Urling Drops New House

Steubenville, O.—Walter B. Urling has leased the New Rex to George Zepps and is managing the old Rex. Urling has reverted to a silent policy at his Columbia theatre, East Liverpool.

High and Low On Music Row

COMPLETING a four months' survey of the popular song situation in Europe, Arthur Behim, formerly professional manager for Harms, has returned to become general professional manager for Mills. Behim is very much in the throes about the songs, "With Pleasure," "Our Cottage Isn't for Sale Any More" and "When Vagabond Dreams Come True."

J. J. Robbins, head of Robbins Music Corp., exclusive publishers to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, sailed for Europe to enter negotiations with music publishers in England and the Continent for his firm's catalogue. He is expected to remain away about six weeks, during which time he will visit London, Paris, Berlin, Copenhagen and Vienna. "Singin' a Song to the Stars," from "Way Out West;" "Go Home and Tell Your Mother," from "Love in the Rough," and "Here Comes the Sun" are three of his best bets.

Uninvited, we walked into Frank (Universal Music) Goodman's office and politely looked over his shoulder at a letter that he received from a songster who mailed his mss. for publication. The only reasons that the song was not accepted were because the scale was written with colors instead of notes; the author took about 40 sheets of drawings, footnotes, trigometric figures and decimals to explain himself. Goodman had long ago forgotten his higher calculus (we never had learned that art) and finally when Lou Handman did look at the colors, the brightness so dazzled him that he couldn't see. If nothing else, this would-be song writer certainly did send SOMETHING DIFFERENT.

Green & Green have started work on a novelty tune, written by Will Gould, famous cartoonist, and Jimmy Rule, entitled "Who's Blue," a song which is rapidly becoming the favorite of the big moguls of the air. "Oh, How I Cried the Morning After," written by Will Gould, is still the firm's best seller. Hannah Green, sister of the bosses, is "the right-hand man," keeping the books, demonstrating songs and singing via the radio.

* * *

Several new music publishers who are scheduled to open their doors shortly include Phil Kornheiser, Inc., his number one song being "On a Little Balcony in Spain," written by Sol Klein, Jack LeSoir and Ray Doll; Al Friedman, formerly with Harms, whose Columbia Music Co. will be located at 1587 Broadway; Abner Silver and Nat Chaiken will be located at 1600 Broadway and Felix Bernard, writer of "Dardenella," Herb Magidson, writer of "Singin' in a Bathtub," and Harold Lee, formerly sales manager for Davis, Coots & Engel, have combined with offices at 1595 Broadway. Yes, sir, there still is a lot of confidence left in the music business.

Word also comes from Hollywood that Buddy Valentine, the hiking song writer, is starting a publishing business of his own with a really great song called "Even in a Hole in the Wall," which is undoubtedly one of his best numbers. Good luck, Buddy.

Going—going—and still going like wildfire is "Little White Lies," Walter Donaldson's proof to the song business that the public has not stopped buying sheet music, but is showing real discrimination in its choice, favoring the song that is different. This may even explain the terrific sales of "Springtime in the Rockies."

Plugging Kids' Programs with Special Shows

Community singing should be encouraged at all children's performances, according to Ryllis Hemington, director of public relations for Fox West Coast theatres, who in the accompanying article offers another in the series of "Suggestions for Children's Matinees."

With Saturday kiddie shows now in full swing throughout the country, exhibitors find themselves in a ticklish spot where screen material is concerned, especially with women's clubs and parent-teachers' associations throwing a spotlight on the suitability of programs offered. This series of articles, however, eliminates speculation and outlines a definite line of procedure for successful operation of junior matinees.

Regularly in Motion Picture News appears a list of suggested programs for Saturday shows, published sufficiently in advance for exhibitors to secure material outlined in the chart. Suggested programs for Saturday, Nov. 1, and Saturday, Nov. 8, follow.

ARMISTICE DAY, Nov. 11.

"The World War came to an end Monday, November 11, 1918 at 11:00 o'clock A. M. The armistice, which was imposed upon Germany by the Allies and the United States, was signed by the German plenipotentiaries near Senlis, France, at 5 o'clock A. M. and hostilities ceased at 11 o'clock."

The Unknown Soldier. Armistice Day, 1920, was signalized in both France and England by the burial of an unknown soldier in the highest place of honor the country could give; in France beneath the Arc de Triomphe, in England in Westminster Abbey (with a cenotaph in Whitehall).

Armistice Day, 1921, the American unknown soldier was buried in Arlington National Cemetery, Washington, D. C.

Observance of the Day. Two minutes of remembrance.

"On the feast of the soldier-saint Martin, 1919, for the space of two minutes, at 11 o'clock, there fell on the whole Empire as it were from heaven a sacred silence and cessation from action. It was the moment at which, a year earlier, the roar of cannon had been hushed. Men and women seemed to be going about their business on their lawful occasions, expecting nothing particular but now and then looking up. No especial preparations had been made except that services had begun in the churches. Suddenly a church bell or two is heard—then the detonation of a rocket; policemen's hands go up; and in a moment 'streaming London's central roar' is hushed and myriads stand with bowed heads; some kneel. Soldiers come to attention; trains, omnibuses, vessels, stop. It is the same the globe over; on the high seas, in a million villages. In warehouses, shops, bank, field, mine or railway, all is stilled. . . . The silence was the hush of a multitude which no man could remember, to pause in the midst of turmoil and hubbub, of business and pleasure."—"Nineteenth Century", December 1919.

"Lest we forget", is the prevailing thought of the day, which is demonstrated in the two minutes of silence at 11 A. M. when "every face is turned to the East in the fields of Flanders."

Programs may well include some of the popular songs and other martial music of the period such as "There's a Long, Long Trail", "Over There", "Smiles", "Tipperary"; poems on the armistice and Unknown Soldier and historical addresses. These addresses should feature the local participation in the conflict, not only of those who enlisted but of those who served at home, in Red Cross, Food administration and in other ways. As the years pass increasing tribute will be paid to the leaders of the Ally forces, both in battle and diplomacy, including King Albert, Generals Allenby, Foch, Haig, Joffre, and Pershing; and other leaders such as Balfour, Clemenceau, Gren, Hoover, Lloyd George, Cardinal Mercier and Wilson.

Some of the poems to be especially noted are: "Unknown Soldier" by Angela Morgan, "Americas' Welcome Home" by Van Dyke, "You and You, to the American Private in the Great War" by Edith Wharton, "November Eleventh" by Elizabeth Hanly.

(a) Display of American flags and flags of Allied nations.
(b) Guests of honor:
1. Officers of American Legion,
2. World War nurses.
(c) Every community has an Armistice Day Parade. Enter a float or unit in the name of your Junior Matinee, presenting an episode of World War history, using children to carry out this idea.

THE

Projectionists' Round Table

By John F. Rider

IF WE consider the impedance characteristic of the parallel resonant circuit as the basis for the discussion, its use in practice becomes quite clear. As in the case of the series resonant arrangement, the frequency of the voltage applied to the circuit governs the amount of current which will flow through the circuit, because the total impedance of the circuit is a function of frequency.

We have found that the parallel circuit at resonance offers a very high impedance as is shown by the curve of Figure 66B. The effect of the impedance relation upon the current is shown in Figure 66C. Just what can be accomplished in the form of current control with the parallel resonant circuit is dependent upon the manner in which the circuit is used. Consider Figure 67A.

We have a source of voltage which causes current flow through a winding. If we connect a parallel resonant circuit LC in shunt with this winding as in the illustration, a certain amount of current will be bypassed through LC at all frequencies other than resonance. This action makes possible equalization of the current flowing through the winding. Suppose that the character of the voltage source is such that the value of the voltage upon the resonant frequency is less than voltage available at all other frequencies.

Suppose further that the condition desired is substantially uniform voltage upon all frequencies. In order that this state be secure, it is necessary that all of the voltages other than at resonance be reduced and the voltage at the resonant frequency remain as before. Now, we cannot change the characteristics of the source of voltage, but we can change the voltage developed across the winding, by controlling the current which flows through the winding. Such is the purpose of the LC circuit.

It bypasses some of the current which would normally flow through the winding upon all frequencies other than the resonant frequency of LC and the final result is an equalization of the voltages in the circuit. In other words, the unequal voltages at the source approach equality across the winding.

Of course, such a condition is secured with a much more complete circuit than the simple LC combination, but the sum and substance of the use of the equalizer arrangement is as has been stated.

Consider the arrangement showing Figure 67B. Here we find the parallel circuit in a different position. Instead of being shunted across the winding, it is in series with the source of voltage and the winding. What is the action? According to Figure 66C, current flows through the parallel resonant circuit at all frequencies other than the resonant frequencies.

By locating the resonant circuit in series with the voltage and the load winding, current at the resonant frequency is excluded from the winding, whereas current at all other frequencies is permitted to flow from the voltage source E to the winding. By combining two such resonant circuits tuned to different frequencies, controlling action upon more than one frequency is secured. Such a system is illustrated in elementary form in Figure 67C. Filter circuits of this nature shall be discussed at greater length later in this source.

Referring once more to Figure 67A, the parallel circuit LC by offering an easy bypass path for currents at all frequencies other than the resonant frequency would naturally reduce the voltage at all of these frequencies to an extent much greater than that necessary for equalization. By inserting a resistance as shown, a definite maximum current flow through the filter circuit is established.

Added to this control is the impedance characteristic of the tuned circuit, so that at resonance current flow is minimum and off resonance the current flow is set at a certain value which is not exceeded no matter how low the impedance of the parallel combination. Thus is equalization accomplished.

Transformers.

The successful application of alternating current is due to a very large measure to the phenomenon of induction whereby it is possible to transfer electrical energy from one point to another without a direct metallic link between the two points. Now, these points need not be far removed from each other. They may be two coils separated by a small space, but not directly connected. Two such coils constitute a transformer and induction is the basis for the transformer. On the other hand, the transformer is one of the major reasons for the success of alternating current as an electrical tool. It provides the required versatility of operation, of transmission. Before we enter upon the discussion of the transformer in its various forms, let us devote a little time to that phenomenon of induction.

We know that if a coil is placed within a magnetic field created by some agent and if the coil is moved or the flux changes so that some change of linkages between the coil and the flux takes place, a voltage will be induced across the coil and current will flow through the device connected to that coil. Obviously the change in the number of linkages can be accomplished in more than one manner. We can arrange to move the coil. We can arrange to vary the flux lines. We can arrange to move the flux lines. Any one of these three systems will cause the generation of a voltage across the coil.

Suppose that we arrange a circuit such as that shown in Figure 68. A battery causes the flow of current through coil A. Switch opens or closes this circuit so that flux lines will appear around coil A when the switch is closed and will disappear when the switch is opened. Adjacent to coil A we locate coil B, connected to a current indicating device. If, for some reason, a voltage is induced across coil B, current will flow through the current indicating instrument G. If we close the switch S, current flows through coil A and flux lines appear around the coil and radiate out into space. Now, some of these flux lines link with coil B or cut coil B.

At the same time we can say that the turns of coil B cut the flux lines which surround coil A. Both statements mean the same thing. At the moment that the switch is closed flux lines are developed around coil A, but they do not arrive at their maximum value at the instant the switch is closed because the current through A is gradually increasing until it reaches its normal maximum.

During the period that the current through A is reaching its final steady state, there is a change in the flux which links coil B and coil A. Hence a voltage is induced across coil B and current flows through the indicating device G. Evidently some of the electrical energy in circuit A has been transferred to circuit B. Such is actually the case although there is no direct metallic link between the two circuits. This statement does not mean that there is no link of any nature. There is a link, but in the form of the flux lines which cut the turns of coil B. These lines are common to both coils hence link both coils.

If we continue the observations we note that a short period after S is closed the indication upon G decreases to zero, and the fact that a steady value of current is flowing through coil A and a steady magnetic field surrounds coil A is of no consequence. The current in circuit B remains zero. This condition is due to the lack of change of flux linkage between steady flux around A and the turns of coil B. The turns of coil B are still within the field of coil A, but since there is no variation in the flux linkage between the lines and coil B there is no voltage developed across coil B.

Suppose that we maintain the current through A at a steady state and move coil B. We note that the motion causes an indication of current upon G. We generate a voltage by moving the conductor within the field. However, the moment that coil B comes to rest the current in G again becomes zero. Let us return B to its original position and vary the position of coil A with the steady current flowing through its turns.

Again we note current in circuit B as long as coil A is in motion. The moment it comes to rest, current in circuit B returns to zero value. The motion on the part of coil A is movement of the flux lines and a change in the number of linkages between coil B and the fluxlines.

Suppose that both coils are at rest and the current in circuit B is zero. We now open the switch S so that current flow in circuit A is interrupted. We note a momentary indication of current in circuit B. This is due to a change in the number of linkages between coil B and the collapsing field of coil A. Thus, if we produce some state wherein two coils are adjacent to each other, cause the flow of varying current through one coil so that the field varies and place the second coil in such position that the turns of coil B cut the flux lines of coil A at an angle, we induce a voltage across the secondary winding, coil B.

The relative positions of the two windings are of importance. If the two coils are close together, more of the flux lines created around A will cut coil B, hence coupling between coil A and coil B is close. If they are far apart the number of the flux lines which are common to both coils will be less and coupling between the two coils will be loose.

The arrangement of two coils so that flux due to the current flowing in one coil cuts the turns of the other coil and induces a voltage in the transformer. Based upon the elementary explanation the transformer consists of two windings, a primary winding and a secondary winding. The primary winding is the source of the flux lines or expressed in another manner, the primary winding carries the magnetizing current. The secondary winding is that in which the voltage is induced.

Types of Transformers

Transformers used in practice are of various types. Let us refer once more to the elementary transformer. We shall start with A.C. input to coil A so that the flux surrounding coil A is varying and a voltage will be induced across coil B and current will flow through G.

Suppose we set an arbitrary value of 100 turns for coil A and say that coil B is fixed in position with respect to A. This position is adjacent to coil A, as in Figure 69. The resistance R is connected across coil B. If we apply a voltage E to the coil A, a current I will flow in that circuit. The exact value of this current is naturally dependent upon the structure of coil A and the frequency of E. Let us forget the frequency at the moment and discuss the effect of the turn relation between coils A and B. We shall assume that every line of flux which surrounds coil A cuts every turn of coil B.

The flux is due to the current in A and this current is naturally due to the voltage. The flux is also due to the turns of coil A, hence there is a relation between the number of turns and the voltage. Operating upon the premise that all of the flux is common to both coils, the voltage induced across coil B is going to depend upon the turns in coil B. If the number of turns in coil B is equal to the turns in coil A, the voltage induced across coil B will be the same as applied to A.

Hence, if a voltage E applied to 100 turns in A causes a number of flux lines and these flux lines again cut 100 turns, the induced voltage will equal the impressed voltage. Hence, if the secondary voltage is equal to the primary voltage the ratio of the secondary to primary voltage will be unity. Hence, such a transformer is a 1:1 transformer.

If we maintain the A circuit as before and reduce the number of turns in the B circuit to 50, the voltage induced across coil B will be less than that across coil A. Such a transformer is a step-down transformer. On the other hand if we make coil B with 200 turns instead of 100 and keep coil A as before, the voltage induced across the secondary winding will be greater than that applied to the primary or coil A and the transformer is a step-up transformer. Thus, we have three types of transformers; that is, as far as voltage ratio is concerned. This reference to types has no bearing upon physical structure.

The selection of any one of these types is a matter of the work required. The presence of voltage and current in the A or primary circuit represents energy. The presence in the B or secondary circuit of voltage developed across the coil B and current flow through the device R connected to B also represents energy. Hence, we have energy in the primary and energy in the secondary circuits. This energy is in electrical form and the function of the transformer is to transfer energy from one point to another.

Now, we also note that there can be a change in the magnitude of the voltages in these circuits. The output or secondary voltage may be equal to, greater or less than the primary voltage. Hence, we can say that the function of a transformer is to transfer energy from one point to another at various voltages.

To properly understand the action of the transformer is quite important. One is apt to believe that it can be employed to increase energy during the process of transfer. Such is not the case. At best the amount of electrical energy in the primary circuit is transferred to the secondary circuit. In practice it is impossible to achieve such a condition because some of the electrical energy is converted into heat and therefore lost during the process of transfer. Hence, the amount of electrical energy in the secondary circuit is always less than that in the primary. Such is the true condition irrespective of the voltage in the primary or secondary circuits.

Recognizing that the electrical energy present in the primary circuit consists of current and voltage and assuming that 100 per cent efficiency is secured, the relation between the current and voltage in the secondary circuit is at all times such that it equals the electrical energy originally in the primary. Thus, if we have 100 volts and one ampere in the primary circuit and the transformer is arranged to provide 1,000 volts in the secondary circuit, the current in the secondary must be such at 100 per cent efficiency that

Thus, the transformer will transform voltage and current from one value to another but will only transfer energy in its electrical state from one circuit to another. This is the elementary explanation of the transformer and the relation between the primary and secondary circuits. More detailed data will follow.

The Auto-Transformer

The transformer, consisting of two separate cells, functions by virtue of the flux linkage between the two coils. That such linkage occur does not make imperative the use of two coils which are entirely separated. It is possible to employ one coil and to secure a transformation action. Such a unit is called an auto-transformer and is shown in simple form in Figure 70A.

Imagine a coil B which is tapped at its midpoint. It has a total number of N turns. A portion of this complete winding shall be designated as the A winding. It is shown in heavy lines. A voltage E is impressed across these turns equal to $N^1$ turns. The flux produced by the current flowing through $N^1$ turns cuts these turns and also the remainder of the coil; therefore, the complete coil of N turns. Let us say that all of the flux produced in coil A cuts all of the turns in coil B, which is the complete coil. Let us further say that the voltage impressed across $N^1$ turns is E. Then the voltage across the complete coil will be the ratio between the total turns in B or N turns and the turns in coil A or $N^1$ turns times the voltage applied. This may be expressed as winding is known as an auto-transformer. It can be employed to step-up or step-down voltage by properly dividing the number of turns used for the B circuit. Thus, if the coil A is the complete winding and the B circuit is tapped at some point, the voltage across the B winding will be less than the A winding. Such is shown in Figure 70B. One marked difference must be recorded. Examine Figures 69 and 70 A. While the auto-transformer has its primary (A) and secondary (B) circuits,

Such a transformer consisting of just one

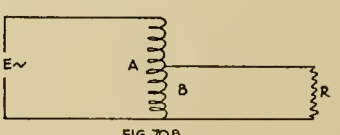

FIG. 70B

Tom Sawyer

(Paramount)

Big Possibilities

(Reviewed by Don Ashbaugh)

NOTE this one on the booking sheets and prepare to brace the walls—they're going to bulge. It's first class entertainment for every age, sex and class. Should produce rich runs in almost any house.

Nearly every man, woman and child in America has read Mark Twain's immortal classic. Paramount has assembled a fine cast, selected the choicest bits from the book and turned out a production which brought the strongest applause of any preview showing in months in a favorite Glendale, Calif., theatre.

Jackie Coogan, the soulful-eyed "kid" of yesterday, blossoms forth in his next step up the acting ladder. His performance in the title role is nothing short of amazing.

The "kid" who first captured the hearts of America's womanhood with his wistful looks in juvenile role will regain his old following and augment it with many more after Tom Sawyer is shown. In short, young Coogan steps forth as a polished performer, showing promise of becoming one of the outstanding actors of the screen.

Those who know him in blase Hollywood were amazed at the naturalness with which he endowed the Mark Twain character in the picture. He is a "real boy," a regular barefoot kid who climbs trees and fences, carries dead rats in his shirt, detests chores but still loves his Aunt Polly.

Jackie carries the picture from the start and does a grand job of it. If it was a comeback he was attempting he has already arrived. Prepare to see him in even more adult roles. He'll be able to do them in another year or so.

The rest of the cast is more than satisfying. Junior Durkin handles the character of Huckleberry Finn in a fine manner. Durkin gives promise of winning a large following if Paramount follows up, as Mark Twain did, with the story of Huckleberry. Naturally, in Tom Sawyer, Huckleberry merely fits in as the pal of the principal.

Mitzi Green is seen as the adorable Becky. Maybe Mitzi isn't just exactly what readers of the book expected Becky to be, but after the picture is over everybody is willing to change their former opinions of Becky and make them conform to the part as played by Mitzi.

The little girl star doesn't have much to do except look pensive and be astounded and in love, in her juvenile way, with Tom. She is adorable in her pantellettes and long curls and doesn't seem at all the Mitzi who has gained fame as a rollicking little mimic of other film celebrities. She does the straight role like a regular trouper, however, and is bound to gain many new friends by her work.

Jackie Searle, the youngster who plays the part of Sid, Tom's little tattling, whimpering and trouble-making brother, is a positive riot. He makes everybody in the audience thoroughly dislike him from the start and when Aunt Polly turns on him and administers a slap near the close of the film the entire audience cheers. The lad is but an infant, really, but his work surpasses that of many others who have attempted to portray similar roles as adults.

Lucien Littlefield, as the school master, and Clara Blandick as Aunt Polly both are exceedingly pleasing in their characters. Others in the cast handled bits and small roles to perfection.

The fence whitewashing scene, the school room sequence when Tom takes the blame for Becky's cartoon of the teacher, the graveyard hit where they see Injun Joe kill the doctor and the cave scene where Tom and Becky are lost and Injun Joe chases the hero bent on vengeance, are highlights of the picture.

She Got What She Wanted

(James Cruze Prod.—Tiffany)

Hilarious Comedy

(Reviewed by Bill Crouch)

THIS is a satirical comedy that would have been a flop had not the direction been way above average. James Cruze has handled the talker in expert fashion and, as a result, has a delightful little comedy that is a laugh from start to finish.

Will be satisfactory for week-run houses and great for the split-week spots. It has a capable cast which gives very good performances. The customers will like this and walk out satisfied.

Betty Compson plays the role of a prior Russian girl who is seeking true love. Like her father, who was married six times and failed to find the right mate, she seems doomed to disappointment. Gaston Glass, as the first and last of four husbands, plays the role of Boris. Lee Tracy and Alan Hale are boarders in the home of Boris and Betty and it is Tracy who is constantly trying to get Betty to run away with him. He succeeded often, but is always going away and leaving her waiting at the last minute—only to show up again some time later and pull the same stunt. Hale finally persuades Betty to get a divorce from Glass and marry him. This she does, but only when she has consented that Glass be allowed to live with them. This plan fails to work out and she finally runs away with Tracy only to be left waiting just before the wedding. Hale is killed and Glass wins his wife back, for good.

Miss Compson gives a very good performance as the girl, while Hale and Tracy provide laughs galore. Glass does well in his role and makes the husband seem real.

The story might have been a very bad burlesque were it not for the clever acting and direction. The dialogue is sparkling and fits the piece. The gags are original and are not forced. It's a swell little domestic comedy.

The Costello Case

(Sono Art-World Wide)

Good Sales Value

(Reviewed by Charles F. Hynes)

A GOOD story and the current gang warfare give this some fine money slants. The picture is good entertainment and has a number of exciting situations. Direction is not so good, but the cast get the picture over.

The newspaper critics probably will lambast this, due to an overdone reporter characterization by Roscoe Karns. However, audiences will go for it and get quite a kick out of the picture.

Tom Moore is the big shot of this production and carries the major portion of its burden. He turns in a fine performance which makes one wonder why he has been so inactive since talkers became the order of the day. Lola Lane is good in her part and Russell Hardie a fair hero. Wheeler Oakman is the murderous gang chieftain and puts over some polished villainy.

A murdered man is found in front of his office, in which the safe had been robbed. A gang chieftain with a good connection with the police appears for the usual questioning and is released. Meanwhile, a girl and young man are picked up, but insist they are elopers, although the unsuspecting police don't even comment on the fact that she isn't wearing a wedding ring. They are released, but the patrolman who made the discovery takes them to his boarding house. The youth had robbed the safe in the murdered man's office and had seen the killer. The patrolman solves the murder, kills the murderer in a pistol duel and frees the young couple.

The big scene in this is the one where the copper is to be put on the spot, and this carries considerable punch. Tied in with the present gang warfare this should get dough.

Along Came Youth

(Paramount)

"Buddy" Gets Funny

(Reviewed by Don Ashbaugh)

DIVERTING entertainment is apparently what Paramount desired to provide with "Along Came Youth," Charles Rogers' new vehicle. An enthusiastic preview audience bore testimony to the fact that perhaps they had succeeded. "Along Came Youth" is frothy and nonsensical comedy at which even a sophisticated audience might laugh a bit and a youthful one adore.

The story concerns two American boys stranded in England because one of them had a horse which failed to win races. Their adventures in earning enough on which to go home, especially after they both fall in love, forms the basis of the tale.

They become chef and assistant at an estate next to the one where their divinities reside and eventually "Gangster," the horse, wins a thrilling steeplechase and points the way to a satisfactory ending.

Rogers proves that he has a pleasant gift of comedy. It seems too bad that Paramount doesn't feature it instead of his youthful innocence and his ability to play various instruments. He's a likeable chap in the present picture with no particular aura of lily white morals and he doesn't play or sing.

Stuart Erwin, of course, as his friend, carried a large share of the comedy. He is near-sighted—almost blind—without his glasses, and some of the scenes in which he loses those necessary articles are riots. Moreover, "Gangster" does not like him, and that contributes more to the fun. Stuart Erwin's comedy would help any picture and he adds immensely to this talker.

Mathilde Comont assists in a large way with the fun. She appears as a South American woman of means, and with a huge appetite for desserts. Frances Dee is a pleasing heroine. She and Rogers make a most satisfactory team. Betty Boyd as the heroine's friend is well contrasted and gives a competent performance.

See America Thirst

(Universal)

Good Underworld Satire

(Reviewed by Dick Crenshaw)

HARRY LANGDON and Slim Summerville are seen at their best as the innocents in this farce of underworld life. This picture will hold appeal to admirers of the Langdon type of humor, although some of it will not go over with those who care for a rational story.

Plenty of box-office value in this with the Langdon and Summerville names. Will stand up in the week-run houses and subsequent bookings.

Underworld life is portrayed as being quite comical and collegiate, with its theme songs and gang yells. Trick forts built on the tops of skyscrapers furnish a novel setting for a large part of the picture and plenty of action is seen. A good supporting cast of Hollywood's ugliest and toughest hombres adds to the atmosphere.

Summerville shares the acting glory in this film, making a perfect partner for Langdon. Bessie Love furnishes the love interest, although her part is rather unconvincing.

The story deals with the situation that results when Langdon and Summerville are mistaken for two noted gangsters and become mixed up in a gang war. They accept huge sums of money from two rival gang factions when they agree to wipe out the other. Some of their experiences with the gang's fighting equipment result in a number of laughs. A scene showing a balancing act high above the city streets proved somewhat stale.

Summerville takes the aggressive in establishing the pair's reputation as tough gangsters, while Langdon poses as "Shivering Smith," a famous killer. The two arrange a street battle between the gang factions, only to be discovered in their true light when the real Smith arrives on the scene. They finally spray tear gas on the gangsters to subdue the entire outfit. Bessie Love then turns them down for a police officer and they depart with the money.

The picture has plenty of comedy appeal and should click with any audience.

The Princess and the Plumber

(Fox)

Entertaining

(Reviewed by Dick Crenshaw)

"THE Princess and the Plumber" proves to be another romance about European royalty and Americans. It is better than the average program film, and a pleasant evening's entertainment for the family. Will fit into the first-run spots and good for split-week bookings.

The story is another tale of a dashing young American who falls in love with the beautiful princess of a small mythical European country, and by cleverness wins her hand. It is light in theme and contains a few good laughs.

As the rich young American out to make his own way in the world, Charles Farrell is not as convincing as he has been in some of his previous pictures. His portrayal of the ambitious youngster is rather stilted.

Maureen O'Sullivan has the role of the sweet and unsophisticated young princess who has never been out in the world, and Bert Roach furnishes the comedy as a rich American bachelor.

The story is laid in Switzerland and a few picturesque mountain shots add to the atmosphere. The Princess goes to a mountain cabin with Roach and a baron (Lucien Prival) of her own country. When Prival makes love to her and she resents his advances Roach enters the scene and saves her.

Prival has his revenge when he spreads the rumor that the princess has been compromised by Roach, a tale that gains further credence when the innocent bachelor sprains his ankle and keeps the princess out until morning.

The heroine's father arrives suddenly and mistakes Farrell for the other American. He demands an immediate marriage, to which the principals consent. It is only after they have sailed away in a convenient airplane that the father discovers his mistake.

There is little action in the story and many developments of the plot hinge on implausible factors, such as Farrell's signing the marriage contract in such an illegible hand that it cannot be read. Good performances are given by Lucien Prival, H. B. Warner, Joseph Cawthorn and Murray Kinnell.

Those Three French Girls

(M-G-M)

Spicy Comedy

(Reviewed by Bill Crouch)

THIS talker is a farce that has plenty of sexy situations and will go over in places where this type of stuff is a draw. There are a lot of laughable situations and plenty of optical allure in the persons of the three girls—Fifi Dorsay, Sandra Ravel and Yola D'Avril.

Suitable for the average week-run spots and good material for the split-week houses. Offers plenty of exploitation possibilities and is bound to attract attention.

The dialogue is by P. G. Wodehouse and, while extremely clever, sometimes fails to get over with the entire audience, it being somewhat over their heads. The story concerns Reginald Denny, a titled Englishman who comes to the aid of the three girls about to be thrown out of their apartment when they fail to pay the rent. However, it all ends up when they assault the landlord and they go to jail. He then meets up with Cliff (Ukelele Ike) Edwards and Eddie Brophy. These boys are from the U. S. and are in France to see what the place is like after the war.

The gang finally escapes from jail and goes to Denny's estate. Here George Grossmith, Denny's uncle, falls for Fifi and is about to marry her, she thinking that Denny is untrue to her, having found that he has had many affairs. It all works out that Grossmith has used Denny's name to save himself and when the truth is known Fifi marries Reginald.

There are a great many laughs in this talker and they are worked in at all times, regardless of whether or not they fit the story. Songs are also put in at all times.

Too much dialogue in French spoils many of the scenes and detracts from the story. Harry Beaumont has capably directed the piece, but, given a good story, this comedy would have been much better. If one overlooks the incongruities the picture will prove entertaining, otherwise it won't go over so well. The three girls and fellows are very good in their various roles, with Miss Dorsay having the top spot. Denny also does some clever work.

Just Imagine

(Fox)

Novel and Fantastic

(Reviewed by Bill Crouch)

A WORLD in which people no longer have names but merely numbers—where an eight course dinner is taken in concentrated form in a pill—where highballs are tiny pellets, reduced in size but not in kick—where airplanes park in mid-air—where street lights need no posts—these are some of the conditions pictured in "Just Imagine."

A good attraction for the long run houses and a talker that will do big business in the better week runs spots and following bookings. Many novel angles to the picture afford plenty of exploitation possibilities.

The picture has every indication of being a comedy success. It has humor—delicate, medium and broad. It has plot, novel settings and a wealth of imaginative detail. The plot concerns life in 1980 and life in a world which not only mechanical inventions have changed, but in which manners and customs are radically different from the world of 1930. Marriage, for instance, is considered a matter of civic interest, and when there are two or more suitors for a girl's hand the matter is settled by the marriage tribunal.

That custom forms the basis for the plot of the story. A young trans-ocean pilot, John Garrick, has been ruled against by the tribunal in favor of a wealthier and more distinguished rival, who is also the suitor for the hand of Maureen O'Sullivan. The rehearing has been set ahead four months, during which time John will have a chance to make a stronger claim for his rights. All looks bad for his chance when he is asked to pilot a rocket ship on a trip to Mars. Accompanied by El Brendel and Frank Albertson, he visits the planet and meets with many highly amusing incidents.

El Brendel is the leading figure in the picture and is actually the hero. According to the story he was playing golf back in 1930 when struck by lightning and killed. Fifty years later, scientists attempt to bring him back to life. They are successful and he begins where he left off. However, he finds things changed and relies upon Albertson and Garrick to teach him the ropes. He makes the trip to Mars as a stowaway.

"Just Imagine" gives Brendel plenty of leeway for his style of comedy and he takes advantage of every opportunity. Garrick and Albertson are both splendid. Garrick sings two numbers, "Old Fashioned Girl" and Melody of Love," which are potential hits.

Maureen O'Sullivan is very attractive and does well in her role. She sings several songs most pleasingly. Marjorie White displays her exceptional gifts as a comedienne and provides some of the most enjoyable comedy moments of the production.

"Just Imagine" was written by De Sylva, Brown & Henderson, who have provided a highly imaginative and entertaining plot, clever lines and tuneful melodies. It was directed by David Butler, whose work shows a keen conception of comedy and high order of imagination. The Martian sequences, as well as those on the earth, are spectacular and interesting.

Any type short other than comedy and musical should fit here.

The Derelict

(Paramount)

Very Bancrofty

(Reviewed by Don Ashbaugh)

GEORGE BANCROFT is seen in "The Derelict" as a rough, swaggering first mate. It is a typical Bancroft picture and will probably do nice business with Bancroft fans. There is enough action and entertainment in the rest of the production to hold the attention of those who are not merely Bancroft followers.

The star fights all the way through the picture with William (Stage) Boyd and has a romance, with many misunderstandings, with a newcomer to filmdom, Jessie Royce Landis. Throughout Bancroft does just what you expect him to do; so he won't disappoint any audience. They'll know ahead about what's going to happen next.

Boyd, as far as acting goes, steals considerable glory for his depiction of Bancroft's enemy. Miss Landis turns in a capable performance in her first leading role.

The story is the customary thing about the sea and its men. Bancroft and Boyd are first mates on different ships of the same company's line. The crafts dock at Havana at the same time and Bancroft manages to steal Boyd's girl.

The captain of a freighter gets fired for having a woman aboard and both the first mates are after the appointment. Bancroft gets it and has Boyd appointed as his first mate so that the feud between the two may continue.

In the meantime Bancroft has agreed to get the girl, a Havana cabaret singer, to Rio, where opportunities are better. He intended taking her on his passenger ship, but, as captain of the freighter, is unable to carry her.

Boyd sneaks her aboard and Bancroft discovers it during a heavy fog. While he is off the bridge, the ship is in a collision and the resulting investigation discloses that the girl was on the boat. Bancroft blames her and begins to hate her. He loses his command and Boyd is given the boat.

Bancroft ships on a banana boat and Boyd and the girl sail away. During a heavy storm and while the captain of the tramp is drunk, Bancroft takes command and rushes to the rescue of the freighter, which has lost a propeller.

Ensues many thrilling miniature shots, quite well done, a wild rescue at sea and the return to port, where the hero finds out the girl has always loved him and that he misunderstood.

In the meantime, Boyd, grateful for being rescued, radios the company the information that Bancroft wasn't at fault for the girl being aboard and everything ends joyously. Donald Stuart, who plays the cockney steward and Bancroft's pal, registers strong in the comedy part.

Canyon Hawks

(Big 4)

Pretty Bad

(Reviewed by Charles F. Hymes)

PATRONS probably will get a lot of laughs out of this, but they will be laughing at, not with, the picture. It's such an absurd affair that it amounts almost to burlesque. Even shooting gallery patrons will guffaw at its silly story.

It seems that Yakima is one of these tough guys that just can't get hurt. Even a bullet fired by the heroine fails to bring forth blood, although presumably he is wounded to the point of unconsciousness. However, he comes to and goes in for riding and fighting which would tax the strength of any man. It certainly taxes and surpasses belief.

The story is about a ranch owner who falls for a girl who, with her brother, is driving a herd of sheep across his land. He protects the girl, despite the animosity of the cow men, and finally rounds up a bandit gang, headed by his ranch foreman.

Acting honors, if there are any, belong to Buzz Barton, western veteran. Canutt does somes good riding, but that about lets him out and Renée Bordon playing opposite is very amateurish. Some of the to-the-death struggles are a howl.

If fans are rabid enough in their desire for westerns, this might get by on a double-feature bill; otherwise it's a black-eye for any house.

The Fourth Alarm

(Standard)

Not So Hot

(Reviewed by Jack Grant)

JUDGED by the standards of such independent releases, "The Fourth Alarm" is averagely well done. It combines all the elements of thrill stuff that pleases in double-bill and small grind spots.

Such stories as this programmer tells seldom can stand analysis and "The Fourth Alarm" is no exception. We are asked to believe that a chemical manufacturer is making nitro-glycerine secretly in his plant. The authorities are not notified because of the obvious fire hazards entailed. Just how he intends disposing of his product commercially without letting anyone know he makes the stuff is not explained. Perhaps that was the secret.

For love interest, we have the daughter of the big "soup" and cracker man and the son of the city's fire department. They meet when the girl, indulging her passion for fast auto driving, races with a hook and ladder truck piloted by the boy. He takes a fall off the truck to avoid sideswiping the lady's car. In the hospital, while his broken leg is mending, true love is born.

The girl's father sees in their friendship an opportunity to cover his manufacture of nitro. He has the kid appointed fire inspector for the district. They say love is blind, so the lad is not expected to see what is going on.

But the gallant young smoke-eater is of Horatio Alger stuff. Regardless of consequences, he decides to spill the beans about the soup. The girl refuses to believe her father's villainy and starts out to investigate. She is locked in the storeroom with the explosives just as fire breaks out below.

It might be mentioned that the fire was extremely generous to the plot construction. Although the blaze started in the room beneath the place in which the nitro is stored, the flames considerately burned the lower floor and adjoining buildings first. The boy is thereby allowed to effect a last minute rescue of his sweetheart.

Nick Stuart plays the fireman's child who arrives in the nick of time. Somehow or other he manages to be ingratiating in the role. The rest of the cast are capable enough.

The fire sequences are thrillingly handled and guaranteed to bring the kids to their feet in excitement. And, after all, that was the idea behind the making of "The Fourth Alarm."

The Love Trader

(Pacific Pictures—Tiffany)

Weak

(Reviewed by Don Ashbaugh)

"THE Love Trader" can be placed in no certain class of motion picture. It can't have much draw as a program picture because of the tragic ending. It can't be used as an attraction for the artistic and sophisticated public which does not mind an unhappy ending because it is not done cleverly enough. The theme and some of the acting, however, is too good to be dismissed entirely as trash.

The story is of a South Sea island. The scenery is really beautiful, but the natives too frequently bear the Hollywood stamp. Into the harbor comes a ship from New England carrying a hard, narrow-minded captain, played by Henry Walthall, and his starved and lovely wife, portrayed by Leatrice Joy.

The wife gazes wistfully on the lovely island, feels the spell of its music and flowers, but to her husband it is all wicked and indecent. Her meeting with Tonia, the halfbreed, in the person of Roland Drew, brings matters to a psychological climax.

When Capt. Adams is decoyed away by Tonia on the track of pearls, his wife attends an island fete and further succumbs to the South Sea spell. As the ship sails away at the end of the picture she is still gazing longingly at the island where love and happiness might make her happy for a day, but only a day. New Bedford looks unbearable so she jumps overboard and leaves the audience wondering why and where she went.

Walthall is good as the captain and Drew gives a rather unusual portrayal of the halfbreed. Miss Joy proves that she has been studying for the talkers, but her efforts to be careful in her intonations slow up her impersonation. Her blonde hair is not becoming.

"The Love Trader" is a rather irritating picture, for it should somehow have been good and isn't.

The best place for this talker is on a double bill in a grind house.

Min and Bill

(M-G-M)

Strong Drama and Comedy

(Reviewed by Bill Crouch)

ANY picture featuring Marie Dressler and Wallace Beery will be box-office. But why M-G-M or any one else would dare to take a tragic story like "Dark Star" for this combination of fun-makers as their first teaming picture is beyond comprehension. That they did dare to do it, and that it is a fine picture, is a tribute to somebody's courage.

Good for adult trade in the popular priced week-run houses and okay for the split-week spots. Not a picture for adolescents, but adults will find it to their liking.

"Dark Star," which may be final title for "Min and Bill," is the story of the love of a rough waterfront divekeeper (Miss Dressler) for the little waif that is left at her place by her mother, a prostitute. The sacrifices she makes to keep the girl in ignorance of her origin make up the serious side of the story. This doesn't sound like a Dressler-Beery vehicle, but that's what it is, nevertheless.

Dorothy Jordan is the girl who, under Marie's care, grows up and is educated without knowing who her real mother is. Donald Dillaway, a rich youth who knows of Miss Jordan's parentage, marries her regardless. This situation, while rather trite, is done convincingly and doesn't mar the picture.

George Hill has directed the talker in an understanding manner and the picture moves fast and carries the story in a forceful manner.

Miss Dressler's transitions from comedy to serious drama are remarkable and stamp her as a versatile artist—more so than her most ardent fans imagined. Beery is her boarder and between them they create a lot of laughs amid the serious situations. Dorothy Jordan is splendid as the daughter and Marjorie Rambeau does a marvelous characterization as the prostitute.

A runaway motorboat provides a world of thrills, and a hand-to-hand battle between Beery and Miss Dressler is packed with laughs.

The picture can't miss on the names alone, and it won't disappoint the comedy fans even if they don't care for the more serious moments, for it has plenty of laughs.

It is Miss Dressler's picture.

Milwaukee Gets Picture Madison Censors Banned

Milwaukee—"Mysteries of Birth," which was disapproved by censors at Madison, is playing the Davidson here. Booked for the Parkway at Madison, the film was disapproved by the committee on the ground that it is clinical, that it is not entertainment and that it is not suitable for mixed audiences.

The picture was shown the week prior to its opening to more than 300 representative Milwaukeeans, who were asked their opinions concerning its showing. The verdict was to the effect that it should be shown to all men and women. Boys and girls under 16, however, are barred.

The two diverse decisions concerning the picture and its merits for the theatre provide an interesting example in human behavior. Madison is only 80 miles from Milwaukee, although its population is only 50,500 as against 600,000 for Milwaukee. The results of this comparison would seem to indicate that the censors in the smaller cities are inclined to be more prudish than those in the larger.

Broadcasts Sound Films Over Radio

Madison, Wis.—Somewhat of an innovation in theatre advertising was staged recently by John Scharnberg, manager of the RKO Orpheum, when he arranged for the broadcasting of the theatre program for the coming week over station WISJ in this city.

First the sound portion of the picture, "Eyes of the World," was broadcast from the auditorium of the theatre and relayed by remote control to the radio station transmitters. After the photoplay, short subjects, including the news, comedy and cartoon, were broadcast.

The stunt went over big and created a desire in many of the listeners to see the picture, the sound sequence of which they heard broadcast over the radio.

RCA Dismantling Gramercy Studio

RCA Photophone probably has sung its swan song as studio operator in New York with virtual dismantling of the Gramercy studio. Most of the fixtures and scenery already have been disposed of.

Before it could be reopened as a studio the studio would have to install sprinkling systems and fire escapes. As one official put it, the plant is "all ready to put in the horses." He added that if RKO plans to produce in the East, production probably would be "in the street."

Bluenoses Turn Pale as Shoe Fits

Austin, Tex.—The picture show managers were arrested and, after the authorities had failed to get a single conviction in eight cases in the city courts, certain interested persons went before Judge Hamilton, the district judge, and asked him to charge the grand jury to indict the motion picture exhibitors in his district.

The judge read the statutes and replied that he would have to charge the grand jury to enforce the laws against every business mentioned in Article 286, and that he would not select any particular misdemeanor apart from the others and ask an indictment on same.

Melcher, Ia.—This town has a man who has never seen a motion picture show. He is aged 50 and is named George Arthur Fletcher, produce merchant. He says that he was taught not to go to film theatres and that he has abstained along with the use of tobacco or intoxicants. He has never hunted or fished or learned to swim. "What I know about a movie is only what my boys tell me and what I see as I go by the theatres," he said. He would substitute the church for the film theatre, he said.

Gambling Layout Hits Front Page

Tampa, Fla.—Paul Short got a lot of front page publicity for the Tampa through the display, in the lobby of the theatre, of a real gambling lay-out. The lobby of the Tampa is exceptionally large and each week Paul arranges an elaborate display of some kind to boost his coming attractions. This week, as a teaser for the next week's showing of "Monte Carlo," he had a handsome gambling outfit, consisting of a roulette table, lottery wheel and "crap" table, with attendants in' everything, on display in the lobby. Patrons were permitted to try their luck and if they made three straight winners they received a pair of passes.

Everything went fine until the editor of the Tribune came out with an editorial calling attention to the fact that the State law provided that the mere possession of gambling paraphernalia was prima facie evidence of gambling and that the outfit could be seized by any officer. The evidence was removed pronto, but the story broke on the front pages and everybody knows about the coming of "Monte Carlo" now.

the two circuits are directly joined. Such is not the case with the unit shown in Figure 69.

The primary and secondary circuits are coupled by means of the magnetic flux, but they are separate entities. There is no direct metallic link between A and B in Figure 69, but there is a direct metallic link between A and B in Figures 70A and 70B. This is important and its effects shall be shown later.

Number of Windings in Transformer

We shall refrain from entering upon the more detailed items related to the operation of transformers and their characteristics until we have completed the elementary details. Supplementary to the induction phenomenon and the turn ratio items is another related to the number of windings which may constitute a transformer. The elementary transformer makes use of but two windings; the primary and the secondary. This number is by no means the limit. Neither is it imperative that a transformer be a step-down, step-up or a unity transfer device. All three may be combined into one unit or any two of these three may be arranged in one device.

Suppose that we consider the original transformer shown in Figure 69. The number of turns in A is 100 and in B is 100. This transformer has a turn ratio of one and the output voltage is theoretically equal to the input voltage. Suppose that we cut coil B into two so that we have two windings of 50 turns each as in Figure 71, so that the complete coil B now consists of two separate coils B1 and B2. Each of these coils has 50 turns and is so located that all of the flux lines around coil A cut the secondary coils. Then we have two windings which will supply 50 volts output each.

Hence, this transformer consists of three windings, two of which are secondary windings. Since the output voltages are less than the input voltage this transformer is a step-down unit. By means of a simple connection we can combine the secondary windings so that the output voltage is again equal to 100 volts. This is possible, despite the fact that the two windings are entirely separate.

If we join leads F and G and bring out a common lead as in Figure 72, we have an output winding which will supply either 50 volts or 100 volts. This winding is known as a split winding or centre tapped winding. Each half supplies a voltage equal to one half of the combined voltages. Thus, the voltage from B1 across EFG is 50 volts in this instance and the voltage from B2 across FGH is 50 volts. The voltage across B1B2 or between the terminals E and H is the sum of the voltages across B1 and B2 or 100 volts.

This does not mean that it is possible to haphazardly connect windings so as to increase the output voltage to fulfil some requirement. Other actions and controlling agents present in the operation of a transformer must be taken into account. These will be discussed in time.

The arrangement shown is not necessarily the maximum number of windings which may be found in a transformer. We stated that a single unit may be arranged to increase and decrease voltage. This means one secondary winding which has more turns than the primary and another secondary winding which has fewer turns than the primary. The former will boost the voltage and the latter will decrease the voltage. Such transformers are actually used in practice and form the nucleus of the rectified power supply systems employed in connection with innumerable talking picture amplifying installations.

More data about transformers in Lesson 22.

Short Subjects

The Spell of the Circus
(Universal Serial)
Starts Well

THE first three episodes give promise of a real box-office bet in this serial, which will appeal to grownups as well as kids. The initial episode is "A Menacing Monster" and is climaxed by the runaway of a mad elephant. "Tinsel and Tears" is the second chapter and it, too, is filled with action. The story is of the love of two circus performers. The owner of the show has something on the girl and tries to break up the romance. The youth is heir to a fortune and the circus owner forces the girl to renounce her love for her sweetheart. Episodes run around 26 minutes each.

Fine for audiences liking serials.

Pups Is Pups
(Our Gang—M-G-M)
Peach

LOTS of new kids in the Gang these days, but their childish charm persists in outliving the new faces. This Roach comedy ends 'way up near the top of the heap in entertainment and sheer cleverness. Pretty much the entire two-reeler is built around little Wheezer and the five pups he rules via a small bell which calls them to him any time the Wheezer inclination would have it that way. But Wheezer loses the bell, also the pups, who get dizzy trying to obey the dictates of locomotive whistles, church bells, and whatnot. The gang eventually goes in for a pet show and succeeds, as usual, in breaking up the proceedings with their varied assortment of live stock. Directed by Robert McGowan with great charm and appeal. Running time, 19 minutes.

Advertise this. It rates this consideration as an added attraction.

French Fried
(Educational—Terrytoon)
Good

THIS cartoon indicates a trend that we believe will raise the audience appeal of animated drawings by the inclusion of two men among the actors. The picturization of humans by the cartoonist's pen, instead of the repetitious use of animals of known and unknown nature, will give the artists greater scope and allow them to inject real ideas into the shorts. Running time, 6 minutes.

Fine anywhere.

Monkey Melodies
(Silly Symphony—Columbia)
Foolishly Clever

EVERYTHING else, it seems, has had its cartoon day. Now it's the monkeys. Walt Disney has fairly outdone himself in the assortment of ridiculous postures and gyrations through which he puts his pen-and-ink characters. Cartoons are diverting when they get foolishly clever. Which is exactly what the producer has done with "Monkey Melodies." Running time, 8 minutes.

Fine to lighten heavy feature.

Seeing-Off Service
(Vitaphone Variety No. 1066)
Fairly Good

THE title is based on a business organization which supplies staffs to give clients a gorgeous "bon voyage" send-off in order to impress the friends of the travelers. The idea didn't pack many possibilities, but this short clicks a number of laughs and will amuse generally.

Okay with any bill.

Price War Raging In the Northwest

Seattle—After just a few weeks of "new fall and winter prices" that brought the matinee tax up to 50 cents at his Blue Mouse and Music Box, John Hamrick has felt the press of competition and again reduced his matinee scale to meet the "summer rates" still in effect at Fox West Coast, Paramount Publix, and Radio-Keith-Orpheum local theatres. Hereafter, admission rates from 11 A. M. until 1 P. M. daily will continue at 25 cents, but matinees from 1 P. M. until 6 P. M. will be 35 cents instead of 50 cents, every day except Saturday and Sunday. Night prices of 50 cents remain unchanged.

A more drastic move was also made by Hamrick at his Music Box, Portland. There he will establish a scale of 25 cents from 11 A. M. until 6 P. M., and then will charge only 40 cents for night admission. This is believed to be the lowest general admission charge at a first run house in a key city of the Pacific Northwest territory since the advent of the sound pictures.

Thomas Daley Gets New Assignment at Toronto

Toronto—After a sojourn of only a couple of weeks as manager of the Imperial, Thomas Daley has been promoted to the post of advertising and publicity manager for the Imperial, Tivoli and Uptown theatres, the office being at headquarters. For years Daley was at the Tivoli and was moved to the Imperial when vaudeville was dropped and stage presentations took its place there. Howard Knevels, formerly of Hamilton, Ontario, has been appointed manager of the Imperial, while Robert Knevels, his brother, has succeeded Nelson Shea as manager of the Uptown theatre. Fred Schaeffer, former manager of the Imperial, has gone to New York City.

General Theatres Corp. Merges 2 Salem Houses

Salem, Ore.—Salem's two largest houses, the Fox Elsinore and the Capitol, have been merged and are being operated as the General Theatres Corp.

Eight names are on the list of new owners, including J. G. Heltzel, Hazel Gearhart and Walter Fuhrer as officers and the following board of directors: Harry Hawkins, T. A. Roberts, Frank Spears, William S. Walton and Frank Bligh.

Reduction in operating costs is given as the main reason for the merger. General Theatres may operate the house itself or lease it to a chain.

Manta, Barlow Touring

Goshen, Ind.—Alexander Manta, district manager of Warner Brothers Theatres, Inc. of Indiana, and L. C. Barlow, press representative, both of Chicago, were here recently for a conference with Maurice Hankinson, manager of the Jefferson. They left here for Elkhart, where a meeting was held for the business managers of both Elkhart and this city.

Clever Chinese

Hollywood — Chinese actors are plenty literal-minded. And, if you don't believe it, ask Monta Bell, who instructed two Chinks, during filming of "East is West," to chase one another down a long pier. The scene was swell, with plenty of action—until both reached the end of the dock, when they jumped in and began swimming toward Hawaii.

Maryland Foes of Daylight Saving Ask Legal Ban

Baltimore—Legal ban on daylight saving time, similar to the law existing in Minnesota, will be sought at the next session of the legislature, according to Frank W. Lawson, executive secretary of the Standard Time League. The proposed bill will make it punishable by fine to display any but standard time in the state.

This will be done regardless of the outcome of the referendum on daylight saving which will be voted on by the people of Baltimore at the general election, Nov. 4.

Lawson believes that this bill could be passed without much trouble with the county representatives aiding those of the city delegation who oppose the changing of time in summer. It is remembered that the so-called "voluntary" daylight saving time was not effective in the counties of Maryland and was not liked by the farmers.

Miss Epstein Engaged

Cleveland—Miss Ethel Epstein, Fox office manager, has announced her engagement to Edwin R. Bergman.

RKO Dropping Plans For 2nd Albany House

Albany—RKO will not erect its proposed $3,000,000 theatre here, but will improve and enlarge the Grand, it is reported. Some time ago RKO bought a plot of land and razed the houses on it preparatory to the erection of a theatre, but all work has now stopped.

Film Business' Yes-Man System Reaches Italy

Chicago—Like a producer and his yes-men is the graphic description of Mussolini given by Eric Von Stroheim returning to California from Europe. The Italian dictator's picture is on every postcard in Italy, he said, emphasizing that Mussolini is doing great things for Italy.

Joseph Eric Von Stroheim, 7, returned from Europe a true Californian. "Europe's all right," was his verdict, "but Los Angeles is prettier. And, say, Rome has sure got a bum fire department."

The last observation should have something of the qualifications of authority, for Joseph is an honorary battalion chief of the Los Angeles fire department.

"We didn't see any good Wild West shows in Europe, either," remarked Joseph, sadly. "I like Wild West shows a lot better than the kind my dad makes. I like Tom Mix's shows best. When I'm big I'm going to make shows like that."

Name Draws Go Into Chi Palace To Buck B.&K.

Chicago—A three-months' program of name draws for the Palace has been completed by RKO here. Led off by Olsen & Johnson, the list will offer on successive weeks Ruth Etting, Irene Bordoni, Watson Sisters, Dave Apollon, Moran & Mack, Gus Van of Van & Schenck, Four Marx Brothers, Tom Patricola, Jack Pearl, Rae Samuels with Babe Egan and the Redheads, and Weaver Brothers and Elviry.

The new name program follows RKO's withdrawal of vaudeville from the State-Lake, which became a straight picture house this week, and is in answer to B. & K.'s offerings of picture celebrities and other "names." B. & K.'s recent names included Lillian Roth, Jack Oakie and Mitzi Green at the Chicago. Current at the Oriental, and playing to big business, are Hack Wilson, Ki Ki Cuyler, Gabby Hartnett and Cliff Heathcote, of the Chicago National League baseball team.

The Palace will continue to play pictures in addition to its vaudeville line-up.

Hire a Hall

Chicago—Billy Weinshenker, local Sono Art-World Wide representative, is in a dilemma. The company's new picture, "Reno," after screenings for the Loop bookers, was found to be too hot for B. & K., not hot enough for Dick Beck's Castle, and RKO was unable to handle it because it loses the Woods this month, and its two remaining Loop houses are crowded with bookings in consequence. It looks like the Monroe or Orpheum, the only other Loop spots, might get a break with a good first-run picture as a result.

Weinshenker reports capacity business arrived with the release of "The Big Fight" this week.

Africa Speaks to Some; Skeptics Deaf to Claims

Chicago—Controversy in the public prints here over whether or not certain sequences of "Africa Speaks" (Col.) are the "McCoy" or just one of those things is being hugely enjoyed by the distributors and the State-Lake theatre management.

Letters from "Constant Reader," "Civic Virtue" and "Public Opinion" attacking the picture's authenticity find their way into the newspapers' forums, and are promptly and vigorously answered by "Lover of Outdoors," "Motion Picture Fan" and "Romanticist," all of whom are equally sure no producer would attempt to dupe the public, or that the entertainment merits of the picture are its justification. The controversy may scatter a few clouds of doubt about the picture, but through them shines the big red sun of free advertising. The smart alecks, reading it, are impelled to pay an admission and decide for themselves whether or not everything is on the up and up.

The same controversy is carried on by word of mouth, and its benefits have certainly been noticeable in this town. RKO booked the picture here, and after it had done two, near-record weeks at the Woods, transferred it to the larger State-Lake, to accommodate the overflow. Incidentally, only one reviewer—Carol Frink of the Herald-Examiner—entertained any doubt of the picture's authenticity after viewing it at a very impressive formal preview staged by RKO. Miss Frink, likewise, was the sole local guesser to question the good intentions of the producers of "Ingagi."

Double Features Receive Sanction Of Distributors

Chicago—Distributors here have bowed to the major objection of independent theatre owners in striking out the clause regulating double featuring which was incorporated in the new plan of release and protection for this territory. Double featuring, relegated to the eighth week of general release in the plan, will again be permitted in the first week of general release, as a result of the Film Board's action. Motion Picture News stated last week that this action was a certainty.

The exchange managers' committee which authored the plan will convene again in the near future to list all downstate key centers and devise a protection schedule for each. The plan, as it now stands, considers only so-called "Publix towns." Others, equal in importance, were ignored. On completion of this addition to the plan, and possible other concessions to the independents, the plan will be re-submitted to distributors and exhibitors here.

Allied Not Interested

Allied Theatre Owners of Illinois, apprised of exchanges' action in discarding the double featuring clause, showed little interest. At a recent meeting of the organization there was talk of testing the legality of protection itself in Illinois. Whether or not an actual move to bring the matter to court had been made by the independents could not be learned.

Publix itself will employ double features in its smaller theatres here in the near future, it was learned this week. Essaness Theatres, in which Publix holds a substantial interest, have already inaugurated double feature programs at the Center, one of the larger houses of the string.

"U" to Make Talker Tests At Chicago Radio Show

Chicago—Universal will sponsor a talker test at the ninth annual Chicago Radio Show at the Coliseum, October 20-26. Universal, cooperating with the show and the Tone-o-Graph Co., will provide screen and voice tests for career-ambitious Chicagoans. The resultant tests, Universal promises, will be viewed by the company's directors in Hollywood, who are interested in new talker personalities.

Did the Prince Kiss Mary? She Can't Remember

Chicago—Mary McCormic, Chicago Civic Opera singer, and the challenger of Pola Negri for the affections of Prince Serge Mdivani, cried "Grand!" when apprised of Pola's new suit for divorce, filed recently in Paris.

Mary, however, refused to make any announcement concerning the significance the event might hold for herself.

"They might," she smiled, "decide on another reconciliation. They did once before, you know."

Prince Mdivani escorted Mary from Paris to Cherbourg when she left Europe two weeks ago, the singer related.

"Did he kiss me good-bye? I can't remember. Don't let's be yokels about these things. So many men have kissed me."

Then Mary related how she met the prince. It was five years ago in the Oklahoma oil fields. She was so overwhelmed to see a prince working that, when she met him again on an Atlantic liner, she was somewhat susceptible, she admitted.

"Do I still love him? Maybe. Anyhow, I saw him first."

Chi Scandal Rag To Give Inside On Studio Life

Chicago—Nash & Ahearn, Chicago law firm noted largely as counsel for this city's more notorious hoodlums in their infrequent contacts with the local courts, are to be attorneys for a new motion picture scandal sheet, in process of creation here. The publication will devote itself to the more lurid aspects of the studio and personal life of motion picture people, and will use names and photographs whenever obtainable. The rag will be published in Chicago. A prominent figure in local labor circles has invested $50,000 in the enterprise, according to a reliable source.

Chicago Off $2 De Luxe Theatre

Chicago—The Punch & Judy switched to grind policy this week and made its second price cut since opening. Performances are now continuous from 1 P. M. to 11 P. M., with a top general admission of 75 cents afternoons and $1 evenings. Reserved seats in the smoking loge only go for $1, afternoons, and $2 evenings.

This swanky little house opened with reserved seat sale only and a $2.50 top for two shows daily. A third performance was added shortly after opening, and the top was cut to $2. All of which would appear to bear out what the pessimists have been saying about Chicagoans and $2 admissions to picture theatres.

No Studio Pass, No Knockdown To Speakeasies

Chicago—West Coast studio heads have issued instructions to exchange managers here to stop writing letters of introduction for west bound relatives and friends who want to look in on the studios and lots. The practice had grown to the proportions of a nuisance when the studio officials broke down.

Most managers accepted the admonition graciously, but a few, of more sensitive natures, threatened to retaliate by refusing to act as guide to local speakeasies when parched studio guys stop off here.

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

KEEP YOUR SHIRT ON!

SO long as chain theatre control lasts, you will always find a lot of unrest and worry among the men working for the chains, by reason of the many transfers, switches and changes constantly occurring.

We have noticed it more than ever in the past few months. Whether it was caused by the recent new acquisitions, or because the chains were readjusting their men in the field, we cannot say. But regardless of the cause we would like to caution every showman to try to concentrate more on his present job than to permit his mind to constantly dwell on whether he is going to be switched or let out.

If you are handling your job satisfactorily, there is no reason on earth why you need worry. If you honestly feel that you are not, then you'd better get yourself organized and set before the axe falls.

On a short trip up New York State last week, we found that the chief topic of conversation was, "How's chances for a job around New York?" Or, "Have you heard anything about the changes our circuit is going to make up this way?"

The chains need good manpower and need it badly. There is no more reliable source to secure such "good" manpower than right within the organization. We know all about the story of the boss' relations getting first crack at the best jobs. In fact, we've heard it so often that we wonder it hasn't grown stale. But, for the lovamike, the boss don't have enough relations to fill all of those good jobs.

If every manager devoted all his time and energy to handling his theatre and getting business at the box-office, more district managers would come from within the ranks of the various chains. But so long as you let your mind grow stale while worrying about someone else getting your job, so long will your chances for advancement amount to peanuts.

Chain theatre control is rapidly reaching a more commonsense level than ever before. Chiefly, because the chains recognize the value of promoting men from the ranks. For example, look at the Loew circuit where you will find dozens of managers who have been with that outfit for years, and the newer managers are men who were formerly assistants. We take our hats off to the Loew executives. They have the right idea — therefore they have the right kind of men.

Sell yourself the idea that you are with your present outfit for keeps. That you will gradually advance until you are in command of a fine position and an income commensurate with the job. But first forget about losing your job. It's entirely up to yourself.

Brown Received a Lot of Breaks on The "Dawn Patrol"

Free space and lots of good-will was added to the store of stunts to be found on the right side of A. Parkes Brown's ledger at the Strand Theatre in Shreveport, La. One of the most effective of the good-will building stunts was a tie-up with the local Journal.

The Journal donated 74 inches on Wednesday, 30 inches on Thursday and 23 inches in Saturday's edition. Practically every one of the three large ads was devoted to advertising the picture, theatre and play dates with the top of the ads appealing to the kiddies to help increase the circulation of the paper.

The newspaper offer was open to "Boy Scouts" and "Sky Climbers" under 12 years of age; the offer being a free ticket to see the picture by getting one subscription to the Journal for two months. And two tickets were to be given if the kiddie got a three months' subscription.

Parkes secured a large window in the downtown business section which he devoted to the display of a miniature flying field. This display included miniature planes, hangars, anti-air craft guns, etc. Small planes suspended from the ceiling were kept in motion by hidden electric fans. And of course the window had an ample supply of stills as well as art panels playing up the title of pictures, theatre and play dates.

A tie-up was also made with the Jersey Golden Creameries—known as Shreveport's Dawn Patrol. Eleven of this company's trucks carrying banners on "Dawn Patrol" staged a parade with a police escort all over the city. This parade broke into the columns of both local papers in which the title, theatre and play dates were prominently mentioned.

The parade was a powerful word-of-mouth builder and was found to be one of the most effective of the stunts used. We want to thank Mr. Brown for passing this along to us. And listen, Parkes! How about a photo of yourself, so that we can complete our file records, and at the same time give you an introduction to the rest of the Club?

Carl B. Sherred Staged A Fashion Show At Mishler

Tying them up with a vengeance, Carl B. Sherred, manager of the Mishler Theatre in Altoona, Pa., stepped out and promoted a fashion show as an added feature to go with his showing of "On Your Back" when the film played the house recently.

Through the co-operation of the local department store—the largest one in the town—he was enabled to secure models to display men's, women's, and children's fashions for the coming season. The affair was heralded well in advance and by the opening night everyone in Altoona was present to get a look at the unusual event. Sherred has been in the show game for a number of years and his training in the legitimate field permits him to put on some elaborate stage effects and you may be sure that these, too, were well in evidence. When he summed matters up at the conclusion of the style show he found that the house had gained plenty in good-will, publicity and additional business. So, after all, what more could he want?

Incidentally, the locals all know Sherred's rep as a showman and whenever they want to put on a special benefit performance such as a minstrel show or other form of stage entertainment, they call on him to do the drilling and the various other "dirty work." He boosted the good-will stock of the house considerably recently when he coached the local Elks' charity minstrel show. The affair was a sell-out and the profuse thanks showered upon Sherred spoke well for his popularity.

From time to time this showman passes along many angles that are especially valuable and we know that if you keep your eye on him you are sure to pick out one or two angles that will help your own show-selling. Before closing this little story we'd again like you to consider the fashion show angle, especially in view of the fact that it is now fall and the new styles are being featured by merchants everywhere. Dope out the situation and perhaps you'll figure out a way in which you can let your house in for additional business and plenty of publicity.

The mere fact that so many live-wire showmen already belong to the organization — that they represent the cream of the show-world — every branch of theatre management—that not a single one was induced by a salesman or any other sort of solicitation other than through the actual activities of the Club and the word-of-mouth praise that has spread from one end of the world to the other —but joined after simply reading the facts about what the Club does for its members—all these are indications that it is worth your while at least to get these facts as quickly as possible, and then (if you want to) join and get the benefits that such association with fellow showmen is bound to bring.

H. Lashley Staged A Parade To Sell "All Quiet" In Town

There was plenty of racket at the Paramount Theatre in Burlington, North Carolina, recently when H. T. Lashley, city manager of Publix, set out to exploit "All Quiet on the Western Front."

As is usual with a war picture, Lashley tied up the local post of the National Guard as well as the Drum and Bugle Corps and effected a parade. The soldiers and the Drum Corps paraded through the main streets, stopping here and there to give brief exhibitions of the manual of arms. Banners were carried plugging the film at the theatre.

As the soldiers reached the house, they stopped and fired a volley as a salute, with the Drum and Bugle Corps playing several numbers. After the concert they marched into the theatre, stood in the center aisle and played two more numbers, marching out at the conclusion, as the picture flashed on. Several thousand people, observing the parade, had followed it all along the lines of march, and, gathering at the theatre, they halted traffic for two blocks. This proved to be one of the most successful stunts that Lashley used in his campaign, particularly from a free newspaper space publicity standpoint, as the newspaper came through with an editorial and three front-page stories. And when they'll do that, there must be a reason.

Another angle that further helped the picture toward its successful run was the unique front, depicting the atmosphere of the battlefields that Lashley created. The front was a wow in every respect. No detail was left out to make it one that would appeal. Rifles, machine guns, grenades, star lights, flares, zimmies, and every other thing utilized in modern warfare was placed on display. On top of the marquee he erected a cut-out of a German soldier. Behind the soldier a loudspeaker ground forth the battle scenes going on inside the house, and the tremendous racket thus created excited the curiosity of passersby, and not one of them went past the theatre without looking at the display. And having looked, they were pretty well sold on it, this being evidenced in the sensational business done. Lashley, we understand, is always on the go, and, as a result, his district is hanging up quite some record for live-wire showmanship. We would like to hear more from this showman concerning his work and we hope he will favor us with an early account of his future activities.

Greenberg Landed A Lot of Free Space In Local Newspaper

He has been in Brainerd, Minn., but a short time, still Harry Greenberg is already tying up the local paper. He arranged a tie-up with the Daily Dispatch on "Our Blushing Brides" that netted him a bunch of valuable space on the classified page.

Two-column and three-column ads appeared daily in which details of the contest was announced as well as name of star, title of pictures, theatre and play dates. These ads and announcements appeared for six days in advance of play dates.

Each day for six days, the paper published, among its classified ads, the names of three Brainerd brides of the current year. Each bride whose name was published, upon application to the Classified department, was presented with one guest ticket for herself and husband to see the talking picture which inspired this "Daily Dispatch Name" contest. Much enthusiasm was caused on the contest and it also was excellent publicity in advertising the picture.

Listen, Harry, we haven't a photo of you on file. Why don't you shoot one in to us with your next contribution so that we can pass along the "low down" to the rest of the Club? Oke, Harry?

Edward A. Furni Secured Beautiful Break from Judge

His acquaintance with almost everyone in the neighborhood of his theatre proved profitable for Edward A. Furni, manager of the Paramount Theatre in St. Paul, Minn., recently when he invited a number of prominent Judges and Magistrates to witness a special screening of "Manslaughter."

Furni received a great break in that just prior to the opening of the picture one of the judges in the police court sentenced a woman who had violated one of the traffic laws to see "Manslaughter." The judge had been present at the screening. A three-column cut appeared in the newspaper; the photo showing the judge sentencing the girl.

The judge said, as was stated at bottom of cut, "I want you to see what carelessness in driving may lead to. The woman in the picture (Manslaughter) violates every rule of the road until she finally, through her carelessness, kills a policeman. I intend to send every minor traffic violator to see this film play as it holds a graphic lesson in the reformatory scenes where the speeder is imprisoned as penalty."

Furni also planted traffic signs at many prominent corners in the downtown district; these signs reading, "Do You Realize It May Mean a Conviction of MANSLAUGHTER if you run down a person through reckless driving? DRIVE CAREFULLY is a City Ordinance Requirement."

That's real showmanship, as you will agree. As Furni's name appears frequently on our pages, you all know what he can do along the show-selling line, so it is unnecessary for us to say more. However, Ed, we don't know what you look like, so why not send us in a photo of yourself so that we can give you an introduction to your fellow members?

It will interest his many friends to know that John W. Hucknall, popular manager of the National Theatre in Madera, California, has been transferred to the National Theatre in Stockton.

His shift is in the nature of a promotion for Hucknall and we believe he deserves it. While he was at the Madera National he did much to boost up the good-will which the house now enjoys. We are sure that he will continue to display the showmanship which has so characterized his past efforts, and will continue an active member of the Managers' Round Table Club.

Hendricks Socking Showman Apple On Nose In Parkersburg

Heralding a new type of showmanship, which is only natural in view of the fact that a new man, coming from another town, is going to introduce new ideas. William L. Hendricks, district manager for the Warner houses in Parkersburg, West Va., is certainly waking the town from whatever form of lethargy it may have displayed toward the motion pictures, and instilling in it a new sense of enjoyment, through his showmanship.

Hendrick's type of showmanship, an innovation in the town, is of the calibre displayed by showmen in the bigger cities, but he has found that no matter where he went, his ideas would go over; whether the place happened to be large or small. To give you a better idea of his work, we are showing a photo of a mob of people outside the doors of the Capitol Theatre in Steubenville (Hendrick's former house), when he ran a first night opening for "The King of Jazz." He promoted three eleven-piece orchestras, staged one of his "grand opening broadcasts," with Robert Merryman, popular announcer, officiating, and a number of local celebrities appearing in person. The three orchestras comprised about thirty-five musicians, and were accounted the three best bands in Steubenville. They were playing to decide the title of "Kings of Jazz" in Steubenville. (As would be expected, when smart showmen pull a stunt, it was declared a draw, with all of the bands being crowned local Kings of Jazz. They posed for photos, etc.)

On the occasion of the opening night, it took a dozen policemen besides the regular house staff to handle the mob of people who were on hand; so it is small wonder that capacity business was done, good-will received, and the papers, next day just chock-full of accounts. The opening went over bigger than ever.

Directly after this stunt, Hendricks was transferred to Parkersburg, and by a strange coincidence, one of the first films he had to play was the "King of Jazz." So he arranged to repeat the Steubenville success.

One of his handicaps, he found, was that Parkersburg boasts no radio station. But that didn't faze him. He was set on running a grand opening—and this is how he did it: The house microphone was carried out to the side-walk, the services of a local orchestra were promoted, the papers carried ads and notices to the effect that the festivities outside the house would also be carried into the inside, and advised that the patrons be seated early. During the Grand Opening part of the ceremonies, the show was stopped for about 45 minutes, and music and talk carried through the horns, all handled in the front, just as though it were a real broadcast, with the announcer plugging the coming attractions, instead of the current ones, as the persons inside the house did not have to be sold on the picture they were going to see, after they had witnessed the preceding show. Hendricks claims that this gag can be used by anyone in the country, and he says he will vouch for its effectiveness, especially since he had to hang the S.R.O. shingle up in front of the house, this being the first time the board had been conspicuously displayed in a number of months, thus it is small wonder that the newspapers next day commented upon it. Look over the stunt and if you think you can use it, hop to it.

Hendricks also pulled some other good angles on the picture, among them being a "Handsome Man" contest with the various luncheon clubs. This angle was worked by sending the clubs a letter informing them that the feminine and the male star in the picture had authorized him to present two tickets to the handsomest male and female in the various clubs. The stunt furnished the clubs with something to talk about and proved to be an excellent medium for Hendricks' acquaintance with them. News stories were gathered by it, also plenty of comment.

He also had a couple of co-operative ad pages on the picture, one of which we are reproducing here. The novelty value of this ad was responsible for its success. Each ad, as you will note, carried a blank square. A window card was placed in the merchant's window which, in addition to carrying copy, carried the letter to fit in the blank square, in order to spell out the title "King of Jazz." The contestants had to visit all of the windows and fill in each letter in the proper space on each page. As may be easily discerned, the stunt met with plenty of favor from the local merchants, so much so, that they even put in special window displays.

His other activities in Parkersburg, included a tie-up with the local airport and the newspaper, the sheet agreeing to sponsor the plan and the aviation company to furnish the rides. Patrons entering the theatre were given coupons to fill out and mail to the paper, retaining the stubs, which were afterwards called off from the theatre stage. This proved to be a fine good-will bet as did another Hendricks used in the form of an "Identification Contest." A local photographer co-operated by shooting a picture a day of one or two persons on the streets of the town. The photo was made into a cut by a local engraver, who was in on the stunt, and sent to the newspaper, where it was placed on the front page for four weeks. This is a gag that had been used frequently by showmen and has always been productive of great results. Along with this story we are also showing a photo of a window display arranged for "All Quiet." This will give you a line of Hendricks' activities along this line. The window was filled with war souvenirs, helmets, machine guns, buttons, iron crosses, photographs, etc. The photos were actual snaps, taken over "No Man's Land" and they caused no end of comment.

With work like this being turned out, it is small wonder that they have to dust off the S.R.O. panel and give it a fresh coat of paint. Let's have some more of it, Bill, because we know that your fellow members are interested in seeing how you are selling them by your showmanship in Parkersburg.

Walt Murphy Joins; He Is Managing the Roxy in New Jersey

The Roxy Theatre in Perth Amboy, New Jersey, doesn't lack for publicity or anything else if Walter Murphy, the manager, whose photo we are presenting here, and who we want to introduce to you, can help it. And we hope to prove it right here.

Murphy has been in the show game for a great many years, having spent the larger part of them as a projectionist for the Shustermann Enterprises. From his job as projectionist he entered the publicity department in the theatres, going from there to his present position. When he started at the Roxy he had the house entirely re-decorated, new floors laid, and special innovations placed in. As a result of this the neighborhood patronage soon increased, and when they realized that they had a man who knew his business, and was on the lookout to see that they were given good shows, they increased still more.

To give you a little idea of how Murphy works, we want to pass along a stunt he used for "Our Blushing Brides." Three Austin cars were promoted from the local dealer. A mock bride and groom were secured, with others serving as a bridal party. The cars paraded about the town, with banners announcing the title of the film and the play dates. This move proved to be a very profitable one for Murphy and the added business that he did during the run of the film more than attested to his showmanship. We want to welcome him into the Club and we know he will prove an active member.

William H. Whyte Is Slamming Out a Lot of Showmanship

A showman who seems to have a fancy for busting right in and socking competition on the button is William H. Whyte, manager of the Capitol Theatre in Riverhead, L. I., N. Y.

As many of his friends know, Whyte formerly worked as manager of the Franklin Theatre in Thompsonville, Conn., from which town he came to his present position. While in Thompsonville he found that he had to buck opposition often, and not the least of the competition was street fairs and things of like nature. However, through his showmanship he turned in a very creditable performance.

Upon taking up his duties in Riverhead and starting out to set his campaigns, he found that a fair was about to be held in the town. This fair, a yearly feature, played havoc with the theatre box-office, the house sustaining a loss every time the tent show hove into view. Whyte decided that this year would tell a different story. He visited the promoter of the fair, who was contemplating putting on a baby contest, and, for the privilege of having the winners presented with their awards from the stage of the theatre, agreed to donate one cup for either the Baby Contest, Float Contest or Favorite Daughter Contest. The promoter announced the arrangements at the fair grounds before the thousands of persons on hand, telling them that the Capitol would present the cups.

Whyte received his first break, after the contests had started, by having one of his ushers chosen the "Favorite Daughter," with the result that the picture and stories in the paper all mentioned the Capitol Theatre. During the week of the fair, when every mother was talking baby contest, Whyte pulled the old "Live Baby Given Away" stunt, securing excellent co-operation from the local papers. The stunt was a riot. When the people found out that the baby was a pig they laughed all over the theatre. This gag only served to whet their appetites more for the real baby contest, to be held. The "Baby Contest" went over in great style. It was handled in a dignified way, the paper running a special tabloid insert of 16 pages containing the photos of all the babies in the contest, and made up of ads secured from nearly every dealer in town. This is a slant that it would pay you to work on. There's plenty of gold in it if handled right.

We want to thank him for passing this along to us and we look forward to hearing lots more about him.

AN OPEN LETTER FROM "SIR" EDDIE HITCHCOCK

In Re: The Promising Department.

I have been operating the Hitchcock Promising Department now for the past several months with a high degree of success and find that it has become, and as a matter of fact, always has been, an integral part of the show business. When you come right down to it, I am merely emulating some leaders and executives. They have had Promising Departments operating for years. Take a few examples. There is the vaudeville headliner who has been promised $4,500 a week if he'll take a couple of weeks in Padooka at $2,000; the manager who will be given 75 bucks a week in six months (or when business gets better) if he'll only start in at $50. The Hitchcock Promising Department operates along the same lines, only it comes right out in the open . . . and once in a while makes good. I have broken it up into several units so that whatever you or anyhody else has coming is being turned out by a separate branch of my organization. First comes the Obligation Department. You are not eligible to membership in the Promising Department until I am first obligated to you. That's the first stage. When I feel that I am obligated to you I fill out a blank for you in the Promising Department and from that point on everything gets all mixed up. I find that there is a high percentage of leakage and possibly dirty work going on between my Promising Department and the Functioning and Delivery Departments. The Burns people are working on that now and Gene Dennis, the Kansas wonder girl psychic, takes a peek in her spare time. I am having a lot of trouble getting things out of the Promising Department into the Functioning Department. Once in the Functioning Department, everything is easy. The Delivery Department then takes it under advisement and you either get it or it gets you. It's a case of dog eat dog before you know where you really stand. I have Rube Goldberg, the inventor-cartoonist, working on a device now that will facilitate matters.

Eddie Hitchcock.

Resnick's Fashion Show Clicked Again For Him This Year

They don't need calendars down in the vicinity of the Hamilton Theatre, in Philadelphia, Pa. The reason for this can be best explained by A. D. Resnick's activity. Resnick is the manager of the Hamilton and every year at a set time he runs his Fall Fashion Show. All that the residents have to do is look in the newspaper or at the house program and notice that the fashion show is on. Then they know it's September and the season has again started at the local playhouse.

This year, Resnick added a few new slants to his fashion show. It has been his custom in the past to tie-up the local Sally Shops and they furnished him with the clothes which were modeled by local talent selected by Resnick from entrants recruited from patrons of the theatre. It has been his custom in the past to run the show at the Hamilton alone, but this year he included the Overbrook Theatre also, running the show in one house for two days, and in the other for the same amount of time. This in no way detracted from the business at either house. Both theatres were jammed on the nights of the fashion show. Another angle, and one that may have been —to a great extent—responsible for increased patronage, was that of giving away a dress each evening to the lady holding a corresponding number to one called off from the stage.

As would be expected, Resnick grabbed off a flock of newspaper publicity, as well as mention in all of the ads run by the local dress shops. The windows of the stores also carried neat cards announcing the show. The front page of the theatre house organs were called into play and they, too, proclaimed the event.

Fashion shows have long proved winners for Resnick and he declares that in his many years in the show business, he has found no better medium. It offers unlimited possibilities for a display of showmanship above the ordinary, and, uppermost of all, the results more than justify the work incurred.

A FAMOUS HAVANA HOP!

By EARLE M. HOLDEN

Two hours and fifteen minutes by Pan American plane from Miami and that's the only way to travel. Beautiful black-eyed and black-haired babies who stand on the balconies at nights watching a bewitching moon cast sinister shadows over Morro Castle that guards the entrance to Havana harbor. Below black-haired Cubans making love, and boy what love. Guitar in hand they strum love tunes while the Senorita and her madre look on. No necking here, boys, it's just an old Spanish custom that Mama has to be around. Oh, sure, there's beautiful automobile rides in the moonlight, there's the famous cafes and night clubs of the Cuban capitol, but Mama is always there.

And they tell me she is always around until after the marriage ceremony. Me for the quaint American custom always. We have our moonlights, we have our automobile rides, and yes oh boy we have our necking, and Mama is not around, she is usually out doing the same thing with another woman's husband.

But to hell with the necking and the Cuban moonlight. I'm supposed to tell about the theatres of Havana and how the Cubans and Spaniards like the Gringos talkies. They like the theatres but not the pictures, because they can't understand what's it all about.

Havana is well cared for in the matter of motion picture theatres, and, too, there's several legit houses. I went to one of the legits, the National Theatre. But for the kindness of Leonard Grossman, who holds down the managerial chair at the Encanto and who, by the way, is a member of the Managers Round Table Club, I would not have known what the show was all about, because everything was in Spanish, and what Spanish lingo I know would not go through the mails, that is the publication in which it was printed.

Leonard thoroughly explained the play to me, and it sure was dirty, would like to tell some of the story here, hut that is out, you must see and hear to appreciate.

American's going to Cuba for the first time get the surprise of their life when they arrive at Havana to find that they are into a new world entirely. Even though only two hours and half by plane from Miami you feel as though you are 5,000 miles from home, and the only evidence of American ideas is in the theatres. And the boys who run the theatres there are no slouches, they know their showmanship, and it's too bad that all of them are not members of the Round Table Club.

As I stated before Leonard Grossman is the manager of the El Encanto Theatre. When I went to Havana a year ago Leonard held down the managerial reins at the Fausto, but due to his super showmanship he was transferred to the Encanto, which is the leading motion picture theatre of Havana, and probably the largest on the Island of Cuba.

Other than the fact that the cashiers cannot speak English and the doormen speak to you in broken English, you would imagine that you were entering a theatre right in your own home town in the States.

Snappy and selling fronts are used at the Encanto, while there's many a beautiful shadow box to catch the eye and sell you on the coming attraction. And Leonard sure knows his shadow hoxes. He should take some pictures and send them on into the Club. I'm sure they would he appreciated. The Encanto and Fausto are Paramount houses and there are several others owned by independents. And all are doing a good business because Cubans are great theatre goers.

The peak hour of the show business in Havana is around 9:30 at night. This is not much like things are down in the States, where 7 and 9 are usually the peak hours, but 9:30 is show going time in Havana, and if you are ever in a Havana theatre at 8 or 8:30 and you can count the people on both hands, don't become alarmed, because the house will fill before the 10 o'clock performance gets under way.

A great handicap which the Havana managers are meeting is the fact that most all pictures are six months old. This is due because or the fact that even in our day of talking pictures, most all the prints displayed in Cuba have to have titles and usually a musical score which takes considerable time in the studios. Some Spanish talkies have made their appearances and the people have gone wild over them, but until all prints shown in Cuba are Spanish, those people are just not going to go to pictures unless they have been titled in Spanish. And you can't blame them. How many of us would enter an American theatre to see a talking picture on the screen, an all talkie in which the characters spoke Spanish? We wouldn't know what it was all about, and neither do they when an American talkie is exhihited.

A peculiar custom, too, is the fact that a film exchange cannot book a picture into a theatre until the print has actually arrived in Cuba and is in the customs office. Here we book pictures before they have even been completed at the studios, but not in Cuba. Just another Spanish custom, or should I say a Government order? Harry Simpson, genial manager of the Universal Exchange, gave me the low down on this, and Harry has only been in Cuba a short time, don't ask me if he likes it. Anyhow, Harry knows where to go to get the best wine, and if any exhibitor goes to Havana the first person they should look up should be Harry Simpson and Leonard Grossman. These boys will show you a good time.

And ye Gods I almost forgot. Tom Thumb golf has made its appearance in Havana. Had a couple of Annie Oaklies to go but we have plenty of these courses here in Miami. Reports were to the effect that they are not going so strong in Havana, and anyhow the Americans are the only ones who play golf in Cuba. If you want to get razzed proper, just stroll down one of Havana's streets with golf attire on. Maybe you won't understand what the gang on the corner is saying, but if you did understand you wouldn't like it very much. Not that Cubans don't believe in golf, because they do, they like all sports, hut a person dressed in golf attire helongs on the links and not on the streets, at least that is their belief.

And now one "gorgeous" week comes to a close in Havana. Once again the Pan American airport—in the air—up 4,000 feet—and home to Miami in exactly two hours, thanks to a gentle tail wind and a high flying pilot.

Bergmann Nebraska Regional Chairman!

We just appointed another Regional Chairman. Bill Bergmann, well known to Club members, as a result of his many activities which have appeared on our pages, is going to take care of the regional chairmanship for the state of Nebraska.

He is well fitted to handle it, as he has been located in Omaha and other cities for quite a number of years. We would like to show you a picture of Bill but we haven't one on file at this writing. However, we'll no doubt have one when we present the next account of his work.

Listen, Bill, you know your new assignment means extra work for you, but we are of the opinion that you'll find time to stir up a lot of activity and make the Club membership from Nebraska leap up to gigantic proportions. Oke?

Krier Gets Breaks In Window Display That Help Him Sell

If you should stroll through the town of Walsenburg, Col., you would be sure to notice that the local Valencia Theatre has its attractions plastered everywhere. This is due to the unusual activity displayed by Paul Krier, manager of the house, who misses no opportunity to secure window tie-ups or any other exploitation medium of value.

In order to prove to you that he is right on tap with the goods, we are showing a group of photographs depicting his latest activities at the theatre, as well as some of his past ones. In the photos you will note, though somewhat dimly, a special window display, used on "All Quiet," in which colored stills enhanced the effectiveness of the book display in the store where the tie-up was secured. The photograph on the upper right shows the atmospheric front, painted in prison gray and resembling the state institution even down to the bars, that was used for "The Big House." This front attracted a lot of attention and was an aid to boosting business also.

In the lower two photos may be seen the flashy sign that is placed on a car and sent about the town and vicinity to get across the title of the picture playing. This car, and the banner, is a familiar sight to all of the residents and they always pay attention to it when it comes along. The lower right photo shows a very novel display for "Last of the Duanes." Miniature cows, made from ad cut-outs, a cut-out of one of the players in the picture, and sand hills, combined to present a very effective picture that perfectly conveyed the theme of the film.

Thanks, Paul, for letting us in on what you are doing. Let's have some of your campaigns, too, so that we can pass them along.

Len Burge, Jr., from Canada, Is Active Around His District

Up in Calgary, Albert, Canada where Len Burge, Jr., handles the Strand Theatre, he finds that one of his best bets to boost up his box-office business, and to get the residents talking about his theatre, is to use throwaways that are novel.

The heralds click so well that Burge shoots out five thousand a week to certain districts and they never fail to bring home the bacon. The heralds are made up by him, printed in black on various types of colored paper. They resemble the circus herald a great deal, and they constitute a fine flash. Through the use of mats and effective copy, Burge turns out something that has to sell in his locality. He knows his patrons so well that he is aware of their likes and dislikes in pictures, stars, etc., so he plays up featured artists and supporting players accordingly in all his copy. He never fills up his herald with a bunch of mats. It is rarely that he will use more than three of them, unless he is putting across a novelty. He plays vaudeville as well as pictures in his house, and this helps to keep him pretty busy.

As an institutional plug, he devised a scheme whereby a man was hired to go about the streets carrying a cut-out clock on his back, with copy on it reading: "Wake Up—You're Missing Something at the Empress Theatre." The hands on the clock pointed to the starting time of the show. The cut-out itself was well made. Painted in black, the hands and numbers tinselled, as well as the theatre name, it constituted, as we have said, an effective medium. We hope that Len is going to keep us posted on his future efforts too, so that we can see what he is doing to keep abreast of the showman times in Canada.

Holscher Painted Up Sidewalks To Anounce New Name

All over the sidewalks Charles F. Holscher splashed the name of Paramount. This was all because he wanted to let the residents of Monroe, La., and the nine surrounding towns know that the name of the house has been changed from Saenger to Paramount and was ready to reopen.

The main arteries leading in and out of the city were given the paint-brush treatment every two or three miles with the word "Paramount Theatre," the sign being approximately eight feet high and five feet wide. The letters were large enough to be easily read, even though driving at 50 miles per hour.

The sidewalks on every corner of the downtown district of Monroe were painted with the name of theatre, opening date and time of special attraction. Permission for this was received from the Chief of Police.

Seven hundred and fifteen post cards were also mailed to persons on the rural mailing list; these cards announcing the name of theatre and the next two attractions.

And by the time Holscher was finished the people certainly had the low-down. But that brings us to remember that we haven't as yet secured the introductory low-down on him. Let's have some data on your "deep" past, Charles, so that we can give the rest of the Club some enlightenment on your career in the show game. And stick in your photo, too.

It Belonged to Butler!

In the September 28th issue of the Managers' Round Table Club section of Motion Picture News, Wallace J. Butler, manager of the Ritz Theatre in San Bernardino, Calif., was erroneously tagged Wallace J. Baker. In case there has been any misapprehension regarding who pulled the stunts described in the article we'd like you to know that full credit belongs to Butler. Oke, Wally?

Davison Doped Out Some Good Slants On "Dixiana" Selling

With a big university to draw from, Don. W. Davison, manager of the Varsity Theatre, Manhattan, Kan., sees to it that the students are kept well informed on the production playing his house. So when he got "Dixiana" he proceeded to boost the film to the skies.

He had nary a single press sheet on the picture, nor any ideas on what the picture was, but he had heard that it was a good film, so he sold it. Enough paper was ordered to cover a radius of 25 miles, on all sides of the town, and a quantity more to cover the town proper such as it had never before been blanketed. Felt pennants and lobby hangers were ordered, and these were placed in the lobby and under the marquee. The artist, R. P. Couger, was called in and he turned the lobby into a Mardi Gras. Teaser ads were run in every paper obtainable and scenes were built in three drug store windows, all carrying out the tone of the picture.

Manhattan being the home of the Kansas Aggies, the largest agricultural school in the United States, Davison sent out telegrams on the opening morning of the picture to every member of the 36 fraternities, sororities and dormitories, urging them to be sure and see the picture. The local newspaper broke with full-page ads, with the college paper also coming through with publicity. Another angle, as you will note, that was not neglected was that of placing a 24-sheet cut-out on the canopy of the theatre. A spotlight played on the block letters and served to attract attention to the sign. The entire campaign went over with smashing success and Davison turned in a week of corking business, to say nothing of the reams of publicity he secured. Good work, Don; keep it up and remember we want to hear more about it.

Co-Operative Ads Were Aid To Clark As Selling Mediums

Here's what Arthur B. Clark, manager of the Indiana Theatre in Bloomington, Ind., does when he wants to grab off a bunch of free newspaper space for his house.

When he played "Rio Rita," he tied up a number of the local business men and interested them in the full-page ad which the cut shows. The effectiveness of the ad was enhanced by the missing letter contest slant that he injected into it in order to assure all of the ads being read. This little gag made an immediate hit with the residents of the town and a large number of answers were received—the contestants finding the letters in various ads. Of course, the merchants were pleased, also, and they expressed their satisfaction by stating that they would like to run another at a future date, which was done.

The other ad is one of a type that a great many Club members use two and three times a year. As you can see, it is a subscription plug for the local newspaper. The paper placed in the full-page ad, free of charge, the only thing that Clark did was to offer free tickets to the theatre for every three months' subscription. The page was well made up and was certain to catch the eye, and though we don't know what the final results were, we suspect that they must have been good. This is Mr. Clark's first contribution since joining the Club, and we know that when he turns out work like this, being always active, he is going to prove a real live-wire member. Keep us posted, Arthur.

Watch Out for This Gag!

A brother member was thoughtful enough to pass on a warning about a team operating around the country and negotiating theatre tie-ups whereby they are supposed to perform some sort of auto stunt driving.

The catch is this: they solicit ads for a special circular, have them printed, collect the dough and —exit laughing; leaving the theatre manager holding the bag because the merchants who went for the racket thought he was behind it.

The team who worked it in several towns in the east are now dodging warrants for their arrest in numerous places.

Therefore—be you all warned. Don't be a sucker.

Rosenberg Utilized Some Good Gags to Keep Film Running

Perhaps it was a strange coincidence that when Jack Rosenberg, manager of the Plaza in San Diego, Calif., played "Top Speed" and decided to pull a few more stunts for the film's third week, that he should display top speed showmanship, but that's how it happened.

As a couple of touches to his finished campaign on the picture, he imprinted five thousand paper bags with a big cut of the star in the film and distributed them to the dealers around the neighborhood of the theatre. The bags carried copy reading: "Hurry! Third and Last Week." When the patrons purchased something at the stores wherein were located the imprinted bags, the merchandise was placed in them. In this manner the bags found their way right into the home and proved an excellent medium for letting the housewife know the attraction at the Plaza.

The same procedure was followed out regarding the special 12-inch window cards and the imprinted napkins, only in this case, instead of the napkins going into the home, as did the bags, they were used at soda fountains and restaurants about the downtown section. The cards were also tacked on poles and around the busy intersections of the town. These few stunts were an excellent aid in helping the picture pull through to a last week of good business.

Cline at Scranton!

It was with interest that we learned Eddie Cline, who has been active for some time in Eastern show houses, has hooked up with Publix and is now managing the Manhattan Theatre, in Scranton, Pa.

We want to wish Eddie a lot of luck on his new assignment and we are sure that Scranton will afford him plenty of opportunity for displaying the live-wire showmanship that has characterized his efforts in the past.

LEE BROADCAST FESTIVITIES

Up in Bath, New York, they are still talking about the stunt that Harold C. Lee, manager of the Babcock Theatre, pulled not so long ago on the stage of the theatre.

The Victor-American Legion Broadcast, which was given nation-wide publicity, and in which many national celebrities took part, was received on the stage of the Babcock through a radio set promoted from a local dealer. The broadcast was conveyed through the loud speakers that are part of the house's sound equipment.

The residents of the town were enthusiastic over the stunt and they didn't hesitate to say so. The local newspapers gave it a play, too. At the conclusion of the broadcast — which started at 9:00 P.M. and lasted until 10:30 P.M.—the feature picture was shown, completing an evening of enjoyable and profitable entertainment, especially from the good-will standpoint.

Bullets Plugged Film Playing At Limerick's House

Front displays are always an interesting item to pass along. This statement has been proven to us, especially since we receive many requests for the publication of displays. So many of our members handle the paint brushes so well that they prefer to make their own displays, thus eliminating the salary of an artist, and at the same time giving them an opportunity for displaying their artistic ability to great advantage. As a result we have found that many novel angles were obtained that would otherwise have never come to light. And that accounts for one of the reasons why we like to pass along displays. The one that we are showing was used by the Coleman Theatre in Miami, Oklahoma, and is passed along to us by George Limerick, the assistant manager of the house, who is proving to be very active around his district.

The front for "Anybody's War" that we are showing was very effective, being toned in an excellent color scheme, and was quite inexpensive, the only cost being for the material. The massive bullets were cut-out of compo board and they certainly did draw attention. They were painted in a dull gray to make them look as much like bullets as possible. The big dice standing between the two bullets was used as a street ballyhoo. It was made of heaverboard and mounted on casters. A man, dressed in a soldier suit, his face blacked up to resemble one of the characters in the film, pushed it about town, stopping here and there to attempt one of the mannerisms so natural to the black crows. The stunt created a lot of laughter and talk, with the result that the film played to extra good business. Thanks, George. Let's see what else you're doing.

Cohen Features a Bunch of Cut-Outs To Plug Pictures

One of the best bets that is used by Abe Cohen, manager of the Strand Theatre, in Massena, New York, to plug his shows is that of his truck ballyhoo.

In the photos we are showing you can see what he did to sell a couple of films that played recently at the house. For one, an air film, he placed a couple of cut-outs of airplanes on top of the cars, with special beaverboards along the sides of the autos. The front car carried the title of the picture, with the following car bearing the theatre and play dates. This angle proved to be very effective, especially on a picture of this type, as it was rather unusual for the town to see a display of this sort. We'd like to point out that this angle can be used on any number of air films, or, as a matter of fact, you can work it on almost any picture. Hang on to it, and maybe you'll be able to find a spot for it.

In the other photo you can note the plug used for "The Big Pond." Cut-outs showing Chevalier were mounted on the roof of the car, the sides of the auto being bannered with beaverboard carrying appropriate copy, and the truck was driven all about the town and the neighboring communities. If you will look closely at the photo you can also see, on the marquee, the excellent use that Cohen makes of some space on the front by placing up signs announcing the coming attraction. There may be a slant or two in there that you, too, can take advantage of. Look it over and see what you can do with it. We want to thank Mr. Cohen for letting us see this. And listen, "Abe"! We want to be kept posted on the rest of your work, too.

Man with Big Grin Grimaced on Street For Picture Stunt

When he played "The Sap from Syracuse," Sidney Holland, manager of the Paramount Theatre in Hammond, Indiana, was fortunate enough to find a young man who has a lot of the mannerisms of Jack Oakie, the big chin and grin magnate.

The young man was dressed to imitate "The Sap from Syracuse," being dressed in an exaggerated sport attire with green and orange colored suit, orange and blue necktie, a straw hat with a very "loud" band, etc. He walked about the city and covered the surrounding towns, greeting everyone in typical Oakie style. The ballyhoo created a lot of attention; and Holland feels that it was a great aid to the opening of the attraction.

Listen, Mr. Holland, we notice that we haven't a photo of you in our files, why not shoot us in one, together with a little dope about yourself so that we can give you a regular introduction on these pages. What do you say?

Morris Rosenthal Is Still Picking Up a Flock of Publicity

If any one should attempt to compute the inches of free space that Morris Rosenthal, former manager of the Lyceum Theatre in Duluth, Minn., and now manager of the Garrick, has garnered from newspapers in his many years in the show business, they would probably be counting yet.

Rosenthal hatched another coup when, for four successive days, he received a two-column ad free from one of the local Duluth papers. He booked in "So This Is London," with Will Rogers headlining. Knowing that one of the local papers ran Rogers' syndicated column on the front page, he persuaded the editors to tie-up the picture and the column. The newspaper heads agreed and they broke with the special ad which showed a scene from the picture and also carried a plug on the play-date of the film at the theatre.

In addition to this, when they began to note results, they went out of their way for the first time in the paper's history and gave the film mention in the editorial columns. In order to keep on the good side of the paper, Rosenthal agreed to run a trailer plugging the syndicated column. The idea met with immediate approval and in this manner good-will was secured for the house that would come in very handy the next time a campaign was planned.

A number of showmen have taken advantage of this stunt already—at least those showmen who have had the columns appear in their local papers; but we want to say that Morris has certainly done himself credit through his work, as it is only on rare occasions that work such as this comes to light. Keep it up, Morris, and let's have some more.

Animated Display Created Flash That Proved Valuable One

Through the courtesy of John D. Jones of the R. Jones Theatres in San Angelo, Tex., we are enabled to pass along this knockout lobby flash created by L. D. Bowen, assistant manager of one of the houses, and carried out in colors by Luther Cummings, head of the art department.

The three heads on the cut-outs in the photo were animated by means of a mechanical device, concealed behind them. The flash was one of the most effective mediums ever used at the theatre; and it was no great sight to see adults as well as kids standing in front of the theatre for minutes at a time, watching the heads as they revolved and performed their contortions. If you will look closely at the photographs you will also note the little cut-outs of various animals which are dotted among the display. On each of these cut-outs selling copy was used that enhanced their effect considerably. On the elephants, copy stated: "Elephants of enjoyment"; on the lions, it read: "Lions of laughter," and others of like nature.

We are passing this along in the event that the film is set for your house, but even if it is not, remember that you can use the same idea on any travel film you may be showing sometimes, or even on your serials. There are opportunities galore to this one, and you know that an animated display can mean plenty to your box-office—animating it inside and outside. We want to thank Mr. Jones for passing this along to us and we hope that the future will bring us some more samples of his work. How about your photo, Jones?

KIDDIES' NAT'L BOOK WEEK!

November 9–16th has been designated Children's National Book Week. This is a week of vast importance to showmen due to the fact that a nation-wide tie-up has been made with the Parent-Teachers Association. See the President of the organization in your town and secure their co-operation. They'll be more than glad to help on this angle.

The week offers you opportunities to tie up your local book dealers and your libraries. Have the libraries send out, to the schools, special lists, compiled by them and printed by you, carrying recommended books and a plug on your theatre.

Promote a few children's books from your local book store and offer them as daily matinee prizes. You can give them away by the corresponding number gag or any other way that you care to. You could work in the newspaper by offering a book as a prize for the best composition on "Why I Like Books." There are any number of angles that can be found in connection with this special week; they remain only to be used.

"Dawn Matinee" At Early Hour Of 5:45 A.M. Woke Them Up

We've had early bird matinees and midnight shows, but it remained for R. M. Swanson, manager of the Polk Theatre in Lakeland, Fla., to introduce a "dawn matinee."

It happened when Swanson played "Dawn Patrol." He announced that at 5:45 A. M. the theatre would run a dawn matinee at the time the sun was beginning to lift its rosy cheeks over the horizon and beam down upon the awakening world.

Swanson publicized the special dawn matinee by having the Miller Sisters and Sun Glow Coffee Co. to furnish 1,000 doughnuts and coffee in the lobby for patrons attending the dawn matinee.

It was also advertised that the first 100 children under the age of 12 to line up at the box-office for this special matinee would be admitted free.

It was also made known throughout the wayside that one guest ticket to the Dawn Matinee would be given to each auto owner whose license contained two 2's. This stunt brought in many paid admissions along with the owner of the car lucky enough to have two 2's on his license plates.

He also distributed 5,000 handbills over the entire county two days in advance and placed 50 arrows on all roads leading to Lakeland with white letters on red, "THE DAWN PATROL—POLK THEATRE." And on Friday prior to Saturday's Dawn Matinee, Swanson flew over every town in the county dropping heralds, many of which were good for free admissions to see the picture.

The Dawn Matinee turned out to be such a good publicity stunt and something out of the ordinary that one of the county papers gave it a front-page write-up and mention on the editorial page. The Lakeland Ledger also gave the stunt a special news item in its publication.

And to show you what else he does, we want to pass along a little account of his bridge parties which are held every afternoon at the theatre.

To make these parties more popular, Swanson tied up with a beauty shop whereby the beauty shop distributed "Movie Gift Bonds" to every person at one of the afternoon teas. The "Movie Gift Bonds" were worth 50 cents in cash on the purchase price of a manicure, finger wave, scalp treatment, marcel or facial, on Monday and Wednesday morning at the Florida Beauty Shop.

The Beauty Shop had the tickets printed and Swanson saw to it that they were given to the ladies attending the matinee bridge teas. This tie-up was just another inducement for the ladies to attend the parties at the Polk Theatre.

Thanks, "R.M.," for these. Keep up the good work.

Sound Interference

Those theatres not fortunate enough to have an up-to-date recirculating or blower type of heating will have to pay a great deal of attention to the interference caused by the hissing of valves on radiators.

In view of the large number of theatres still heated by the old direct steam-heating process, a lot of thought should be given to this angle and, if possible, make sure that the old defective valves are replaced with a modern type of equipment. This is a very small item in actual expense or outlay of money but will prevent many kicks and hard feelings from patrons who are unfortunate enough to be seated near a radiator where the valve is creating such a nerve-wracking disturbance.

You might give this some thought the first chance you have to try out your heating plant which is going to be mighty soon, if you have not already done so, and make sure that you correct any condition which exists as the one described above.

Step Up And Take Your Pick From Al Lourie's Grab Bag

A grab bag of gags seemed to be floating around the vicinity of the Morton Theatre in Dorchester, Mass. And floating around that neighborhood it is only natural that it be held by Albert B. Lourie, manager of the Publix house, who is putting across winners.

Lourie has been hitting the ball smack on the nose, and banging them into the bleachers with monotonous regularity. When he played "Our Blushing Brides" he managed to turn in a couple of stunts that will prove of value to you if you ever care to use them in your town. Playing "The Man From Blankley's" with the film, he wanted to put them both across. To accomplish this he fashioned the herald, in the form of an invitation to a wedding, that was distributed about town. Look this one over and you'll find that it is right there, covering every point.

Some gag, isn't it? He had another one that proved a good-will builder for the lady trade when he tied up the local druggist who co-operated by giving away samples of face powder. The drug store paid for the trailer, which was run on the screen announcing the stunt, and also for the printing. The film went over to good results, especially the invitation gag, the residents being surprised when they opened the mailbox and found an invitation reposing therein.

Then on "Love Among the Millionaires," he planted Confederate money on the sidewalks of the busy sections, and it was a great big laugh to see people making dives for it. This is a rather tricky angle and must be handled properly in order not to cause any offense. And now look at the cut we are showing. There's a thing that Dorchester acclaimed a classic in herald make-up. It is self-explanatory, so we won't attempt to say anything more about it. It had the goods, and, as a result, clicked.

When he played "Let Us Be Gay," Lourie was faced with the problem of selling it to the kids as well as adults. To get in the kid business, he decided that the best thing to do would be to stage a "Whoopee Party" and invited all children to come dressed in party clothes. On the appointed afternoon all of the kids present were given noise-makers, whistles, etc. A goodly number of the kids appeared dressed in the comic outfits. These were paraded up on the stage and entered into a contest whereby audience applause picked the three best costumes. After the stage show was over the children were permitted five minutes in which to make all of the noise they could. And they more than took advantage of the occasion.

Every Saturday matinee, Lourie runs a gift contest. He distributes cards 3¼ by 2½ inches, printed in black on white stock. The cards carry letters of the alphabet. They are made up in 12 different combination with 10 different letters being left out. The printer makes up winners with one letter of the 10 on each series of cards. During the gift proceedings, an easel is placed on the stage and cards are shown with the winning letters. The lucky children come up and take their pick of the gifts arranged. This scheme is very effective, particularly since it absolves the manager from spending too much time on the stage and enables the conducting of the contest in jig time. Incidentally, when the cards are received from the printer, they are assorted so that every 12 cards are different, and after all of the cards are mixed up, the winning letters are deposited in different sections of the bundles. Should you desire to use a stunt of this sort, which is proving effective for Lourie, we would suggest that you get in touch with him, and we are sure he will supply all of the information necessary.

Thanks, Albert, for the way you are responding to our call for material from the New England division so that we can keep posted on what is being done by you live-wires. And listen! When you send in your next contribution, how about a photo and a little dope on yourself?

Essay Contest on Business Aroused Merchant Interest

Who said business depression? It wasn't Ray Peterson, manager of the Strand Theatre in Gulfort, Miss. Ray ran an essay contest recently in which the local dealers took a great deal of interest.

The topic of the essay was, "Why Old Man Business Should Come Back." The contest was open to school children, for which a first prize of a wrist watch was at stake. The watch was promoted from a local jeweler and it was given to the winner at the Saturday evening performance.

The stunt not only helped to increase business at the theatre, but through its publicity through the newspaper columns helped to make people, and especially business people, think in terms of better business conditions.

Good stuff, Ray. And listen! Since you are so active, why not give us a photo of yourself, too, so that we can let the rest of the Club meet you?

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Bair Adds Another Ace Ad To His Well Known Collection

Again E. E. Bair comes through and clicks with another of his novelty ads. This time it was one for "All Quiet on the Western Front." Those showmen who have been following Bair's activities at the State Theatre in East Liverpool, Ohio, know that he is right there with the goods when it comes to injecting novelty into his newspaper ads.

If you will look over the ad we are reproducing and study the copy closely we think you will pick out a couple of slants that will more than prove handy for you as box-office builders.

As you will note, you will see that Bair pays the director of the film a special tribute, but he also manages to get in a plug for the book, photography and the sound. He keys up interest in the picture by the fact that he does not plug the type of picture; in other words, he does not try to convey outright that it is a most spectacular war film. He manages to get the message across well. The many ads that he has furnished the Club with have no doubt given his fellow-members a number of slants that have proven valuable in their show-selling. We would like to point out that a careful study of all of the ads shown on the pages from week to week will help to boost up your box-office just as well as the various stunts presented.

We have shown many kinds of advertising, novel, regular, and co-operative, and in all of them could be found helpful hints. We want to thank Bair for passing along to us this latest achievement of his, and we are sure that he will shoot along some more so that we can present them to the rest.

Thames' Prologue Was One of Finest House Had Seen

Whenever a showman receives a film attraction that he thinks deserving enough to merit special attention he sets to work to give it that little bit of something which the Chesterfield cigarette ads tell us "stands alone." In their trailer prologues, the showmen found ways to put pep into the presentation that proved gold mines. Working along on the same idea, J. F. Thames, Jr., manager of the Saenger Theatre in Vicksburg, Miss., put on a prologue that slayed them when he played "All Quiet."

The orchestra pit was transformed into an imitation trench. Crude steps in trench allowed boys to crawl over the top. The arrangement also included sand bags on front side of footlights and barbed wire entanglement on other side of foots. A 1x2 blind stop was used for the posts with old rusty barbwire to give the desired effect. Two machine guns were also used in a camouflage nest on each side of the stage.

On opening of prologue, boys in uniforms and helmets are seen crouching in trench facing the screen. Then the trench closes with soft blue foots giving a glow on barbed wire and the whole stage. Baritone singer is standing behind in machine gun nest. This in order to get the proper lighting effect upon his face as the lights concealed in the nest come from a source about waist high to the singer. A box-like structure is used with mirrors—a red and green light to get the effect of a red light on one-half of his face and a green on the other side. After the song—black-out—and singer steps off.

A boy stationed near switchboard operators gives effect of rumbling noises and shell crashes synchronized with red flashes on stage—coming solely from border lights. These flashes silhouette the barbed wire entanglement and the boys crouching in the trench. The rumbling tank effect and machine gun fire is mixed with the above effect. After a few seconds of this, the projectionists play a spot up and down the trench on the heads of the men and finally stops on the center man with his eyes glued on his wrist watch. This is the cue for him to give signal for men to go over the top. As they go over, the machine guns fire, etc. As they get past the barbed wire entanglement, an airplane about six feet high, controlled from the fly loft, swoops down over them, while the non-sync operator synchronizes the airplane effect with the plane. Men from the machine gun nest fire at the plane as it passes out of sight, while the other men hug the stage. The plane finally comes down as the whistling effect is used on the non-synch.

After this, all effects cease. The stage is lighted with a soft blue light from the foot. The boys get up and go through a snappy drill accompanied by the drum and bugle corps. The boys then form a line and stand at attention saluting a flag waving in front of one of the ventilating ducts. The flag is picked up by a white spot from the booth. When the boys salute flag, the blue lights are dimmed out entirely and a red light only is cast on them from front and rear by olivettes on each side of stage. The national anthem is then played while boys are at attention. After this, red lights are cut out, blues brought up again and the boys march off as the picture hits the traveler.

And what a sensation it created! The audience applauded for quite some time, and if the picture hadn't been flashed on to the screen they would have continued to applaud. When he is turning out work like this we think that Mr. Thames should be represented often on our pages, and we hope to hear from him again very soon.

Good Will Begins at Home!

On many occasions we have suggested that managers cultivate a more harmonious relationship between themselves and their employees. And we are glad to say that plenty of showmen found the suggestion a good one.

But we won't be happy until we feel that the great majority of showmen are practising this little idea of promoting a closer feeling among their staffs.

Besides making your theatre a better place for the patrons, it will give you a peace of mind that you hardly believed possible. You will soon find that everyone on the payroll is pulling for you and your theatre. When business calls you away from the house for a few hours during a performance, you will know that your absence is not a signal for laying down on the job or neglecting the patrons or the show.

Especially is this true of the boys in the booth. If you have good projection and projectionists, the best way to retain those important adjuncts is to promote a friendly feeling between you. But the operators (pardon, we mean projectionists) are just as human as you are and will respond quicker to helpful suggestions if they like you.

Abuse and foul language will bring you only grief.

WHAT IS EXPLOITATION?

FLOYD BELL Says:

Somehow I have always rather doubted the exact truth of that old bromide, "a rose by any other name would smell as sweet." There's a touch of Babbitry about that statement. Personally, I believe the word "rose" must have suggested to the earlier students of nomenclature something sweet and fragrant and I know that today it would be difficult to convince the public that a rose called by any other name would not lack charm.

It's a bit the same with Publicity. Call it exploitation if you will but to me the word has a harsh and grating sound. To exploit oneself is to draw immediately the picture of having been a bit braggadocio, just a trifle over-inflated with one's importance as it were. And I firmly believe that when one speaks of "exploiting" a theatre or any other business he is very apt to cause a reaction which is not always favorable. There is very likely to be implanted in the mind of the hearer the thought that perhaps the would-be "exploiteer"—is that a new one—is trying to "put something over."

But Publicity. Ah, there is something different. So thoroughly has the American public been sold upon the value of advertising that to the average man the very word Publicity seems to arouse a feeling of kindness toward and pride in the organization promoting this same Publicity.

And Publicity—all right, call it exploitation if you like but we shall stick to our own choice —may embrace any legitimate means under the sun for placing before the public the value and attractiveness of one's product. It may be newspaper space, which may be submitted without argument as being the most valuable form of publicity, or it may be lobby display, "stunts," grand lounge attractions, anything and everything that brings before the Average Person—and God bless him he is the one who makes it possible for all of us to hold our jobs—the fact that one is offering an attraction which will please and entertain.

Publicity which cannot be substantiated by the quality and quantity of entertainment produced is bad. The press agent who has within the secret recesses of his brain the thought that anything which gets the name of his theatre before the public is valuable, is losing something, is obtaining entirely the wrong perspective.

It is all very well to "exploit" your theatre as having "the greatest picture of the year" if by so doing you are able to bring the crowds into the theatre and prove to them that you were honest in your conviction that the film shown is the "best" thus far. But if you are merely using such phrases to drum up business and then are unable to back up those phrases with four star offerings, you will eventually suffer total eclipse.

Publicity, exploitation, call it what you will, is sound, legitimate, approved advertising of your attractions and then being certain that your advertising conforms to the rule of the present century, "truth in advertising."

F. B. HILL says:

IF one will analyze the importance of exploitation and ballyhoo, they will find that here lies the real backbone to the existence of the Theatre. Without them the Theatre cannot survive.

As an athlete may overtrain or undertrain, so is exploitation and ballyhoo overused or underused and in most cases, underused. For an example, the exhibitor, especially in the smaller towns, gets in the habit of ordering the same kind of advertising material offered by the exchanges, using the same space and type of ad in the newspapers, on every picture. Perhaps it is true that there are just a few types of stories for pictures, but nevertheless, each picture has an individuality of its own and when an exhibitor will treat them as such, he is bound to show better results at the boxoffice.

It is not necessary to buy all the paper the exchange has, or to work every known ballyhoo to put a picture over. Often times some little stunt or publicity gag will strike the public's fancy to such an extent, that it does far better work, than trying to "circus" a picture. This I think is what really constitutes real exploitation and ballyhoo, for the exhibitor or advertising man, to treat each picture as an entirely new article and to work out his newspaper ads and other mediums of advertising to suit that picture, and at the same time to get the most value for the least money. By doing this he is doing the best thing possible for his theatre, besides keeping his advertising from becoming stale and commonplace. Our business is the fastest changing of any, therefore the advertising must be faster. It can't be kept faster unless it is kept fresh.

Being a manager in a small town I am inclined to believe that the small towner has a more difficult problem in handling exploitation and ballyhoo, than does the man in the larger towns, as most theatres in small towns run two or three pictures a week while in the larger cities a picture will run for a week or longer, so the small towner must utilize every possible means of advertising. He must use his newspapers to every advantage possible and to write ads that are "different." An ad, more than anything else will kill or make the attendance for a theatre. Here I want to agree with Mr. Charles Lewis, Chairman of the Managers Round Table Club of THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS. He advocates white space and plenty of it in newspaper ads. I have tried it out and find that it pays high dividends on the amount invested. So many ads are filled to the brim with copy and so many ads are just a mat and signature cut. They all look alike.

At the beginning of this questionable article, I stated that exploitation and ballyhoo was the backbone to the theatre's success. In closing I want to say that I think proper and carefully writen newspaper ads, are the backbone to successful exploitation and ballyhoo.

SID LAWRENCE Says:

I HAVE found that in answering this question that it seems that EXPLOITATION and BALLYHOOING come in the form of a germ—it hits you and stays with you. Exploitation is made up of interesting forms of advertising gotten out to cause the attention to be directed to the certain thing that you are selling to the public. There are many different forms of exploitation. There is good and bad. The good can be gotten out in forms of novel stage presentations, lobby cut-outs, special letters, flower baskets on the front of the theatre, a neat and attention compelling lobby, capsules of advertising inside, extra newspaper space, banners across the street and hundreds of other stunts. I have always found that each and every picture, regardless of how large or small, could be exploited on some particular angle. Exploitation is a thing that you can not let down on, once you start, it must be continued daily. The public gets used to seeing little new and novel stunts and look forward to you doing them so that they can be more familiar with the type of picture you are playing. The exploitation campaign put on for any picture should carry an idea pertaining to that picture only, unless it is an exploitation stunt that you are putting over to benefit the theatre for the time to come through your various civic organizations.

Exploitation has already proved itself to be constant and indispensable. Any exploitation which makes clear to the public that your picture has some outstanding feature in it, I believe should be dwelt upon. Ballyhooing is something that has been done for the last thirty-five or forty years. It is not news but means a whole lot to the theatre going public as an attention-compelling factor. There are various forms of ballyhooing to be considered. There are street cars, automobiles, people dressed to fit a certain part walking on the streets, wagons painted, victrolas playing on streets, bands inside of automobiles and hundreds of other like stunts which could be called ballyhooing. In other words when you ballyhoo you reach the people direct with the thing that you are getting out, if it does not do this it is not a good form and it is lost. Therefore, whenever ballyhooing is done it should be done with the same idea in mind as the program presented to your public. It should be unique, clean and free from any salacious utterings, pictures, etc.

In summing up exploitation and ballyhoo we get down to the real fact that the public must be sold, therefore, the average theatre manager or showman must get out something that will attract attention to his theatre. I have found that it is not the great big things that we do in exploiting that gets us the biggest returns, it is the small and unique ideas that register. Some managers can go exploitation crazy—this, I believe, is a mistake as you leave nothing to be done for future work. Figuring on a basis of fifty-two weeks in a year you should always leave something in reserve.

This week's opinions come from Floyd Bell, Metropolitnn, Boston; F. B. Hill of the Inlnnd Circuit in the Northwest, and Sid Lnwrence of Lima, Ohio.

Get Started Now!

You should be perfecting your plans right now for one or two special morning shows, preferably sponsored by local Chamber of Commerce or Welfare organizations, which will help the poor and needy around Thanksgiving when they have little to be thankful for. Last year, after making such suggestions through the Club pages, hundreds of vegetable or food shows were put across with great success.

The details are few and simple. Just advertise the special performance for kids, with the only admission charge being a bag of vegetables or food. Then see that the foods so received are promptly and sensibly distributed via baskets or bags through the Salvation Army or Welfare Clubs of your community. In addition, you ought to be able to promote other items to fill the bags or baskets from the various merchants in town.

You perform a humane act in sponsoring these performances and besides you create more goodwill than through any other medium ever thought of.

Keep away from the toy angle as that should be held for similar gags around the Christmas holidays.

Dick Ryan Roping In Plenty of Publicity For House

With every man in Sam Rinzler's division in Brooklyn and Long Island of the Fox Theatre working like the deuce to put the popularity contest which is forming an important part of Greater Show Season across, it is no surprise to find out that R. J. (Dick) Ryan is slapping the old apple hard and heavy to bring them into his house—the Park, at Brooklyn, N. Y.

In the photos we are showing you can gain some idea of what Dick is doing to sell the Popularity Contest in his lobby. He has promoted pictures from the steamship company offering one of the prizes; promoted a blackboard to announce the current results of the votes polled; and also announces a personal appearance of all the contestants in the circuit stunt. His lobby has been tastefully decorated in a Mardi Gras tone and it has pepped up the front of the house considerably.

The other photo—though somewhat indistinct—shows one of the many window displays he secured. Besides carrying a couple of banners announcing the event at the Park, the window showed a picture of a steamship and also the blackboard on which had been placed the standings to date of the contestants. But the big punch in the window was the balloons which floated all around the interior. A fan, concealed on the bottom of the window caused them to soar about. The window attracted plenty of attention from passersby, who had never seen the stunt before, with the result that the theatre obtained some fine word-of-mouth publicity.

This is Dick's first contribution since he has been at the house, so you'll agree with us that he seems to be in line for a rating of active member. Keep it up, Dick, and let's know what else you are doing.

Edward Stoffer Is Very Handy with a Paint Pot and Brush

Another showman who finds his skill with the paint brush a valuable asset to him in the display work that he turns out to plug the attractions playing at his house, the Biltmore Theatre in Brooklyn, N. Y., is Edward Stoffer, live-wire showman handling the house.

Stoffer has been fashioning some great stuff along these lines, and a scrutiny of some of his work which we are presenting here—though the dark photographs made reproduction poor—will be productive of a slant or two on which you can base your own work. For his display on "Caught Short" he used the regular three-sheet, made a cut-out from it, and flanked it with stills. The cut-out was then placed before a board on which stock quotations had been painted. A real ticker, in operation, served to enhance the effectiveness of the lay-out, and strings of ticker tape helped to further it.

The other display was used on "The Unholy Three." Again a three-sheet cut-out, flanked with stills, was used. As the special touch on this one, Stoffer used the affidavit declaring that the star of the picture had used no vocal double. This was placed on an attractively painted beaverboard with an arrow pointing toward it, and the interest evidenced, when people crowded before it at all times of the day, spoke well for the success of the film. We are very glad to pass along these few accounts of Mr. Stoffer's work as we feel his fellow-members are just as much interested as we are, and we hope that he is going to keep us posted on his future work along the show-selling line. What do you say, Edward?

Imprinted Drinking Cups Used By McKenna To Plug Show

By effecting a tie-up with the maker of a well-known beverage, J. McKenna, manager of the Lyric Theatre in Jackson, Tenn., was enabled to procure a generous quantity of imprinted paper drinking cups which were used to get across the attraction at his house.

The paper cups were distributed at places where the drink was served in bottles. The cups in this instance were used by putting the bottle inside one of the paper bags, primarily to stop the dripping ice water from soiling one's clothes. One set of the cups was imprinted about "Romance" with name of theatre and playdates while another set was devoted to institutional copy about the theatre.

This is but one of the many activities attempted by McKenna at his house, and we happen to know that he makes many valuable tie-ups in his town. In this manner he displays some good showmanship, and we'd like to hear more from him. What do you say, Mac, keep us posted, will you?

La Falce Plugging Two!

You are all acquainted with Frank's work and know what his capabilities are; so keep your eye on the Club pages and get the latest dope on how he brings in the dough to the box-office.

Fans Regret Departure of Forster

(From Syracuse American—Sept. 14th)

By E. R. VADEBONCOEUR

Another familiar face faded—temporarily, at least—from Syracuse theatre circles when Paul H. Forster closed his organ and stepped down at the Eckel last week.

For a good many years, Forster has been playing for motion picture theatre audiences here and his departure will be keenly regretted by his admirers, who run into the thousands.

Paul Forster is the man who made Syracuse sing. It was he who introduced the organ-singing feature to the city at the Empire when the big, white consoles still were new to Syracusans.

At the Empire, the idea caught at once. They sang with Forster. He went to the Eckel and they sang with him there. He went to Loew's, and still they sang. He went back to the Eckel again and once more the house rang to willing voices.

Not So Easy

Other organists tried to do the same thing, but with indifferent success. The late Ernie Mills, at the Strand, worked up some enthusiasm. That splendid musician, Maurice, tried to make Loew audiences warble, but eventually abandoned the idea and arranged his programs to eliminate that feature.

But all the time they were singing for Forster. No one else could bring out those voices. We've often sat and listened to him, trying to discover why he succeeded where others failed.

We've heard patent-leather-haired sheiks jazzing it up, gray-haired old gentlemen gazing around them half abashed and sneaking into the first number or two diffidently, only to wind up the last songs bellowing at the tops of their voices.

It was a contagious affair. The flappers and their mammas all caught the fever. The more timid might not be heard at the outset, but before the orgologue ended you'd look a long way before you'd find a closed mouth.

You'd hear good voices and fair voices, excellent voices and terrible voices, but they all had one thing in common—enthusiasm.

Transformed Folk

Until two weeks ago, when the organ was moved, audiences saw only the back of Forster's somewhat grayed head during the orgologue. But there was something eloquent in it. When the spotlight bloomed out in its glowing circle, a buzz would run through the audience. You could hear it and feel it. By some unseen touch, even the back of Forster's head seemed capable of changing the whole spirit of the audience. Where, a few minutes before, it had been a group of individuals watching the joys and trials of screen lovers, they now became as closely-knit as a picnic crowd.

There was competition to see who could sing the loudest. There were giggles at false notes and high ones that voices cracked on. There were roars of laughter at tricky choruses and flocks of S's and ch's through which the organist led his chorus at increasing pace until the whole song broke down in a spasm of mirth.

Yes, Paul Forster made them sing. Maybe he will again. But if he doesn't, he will leave behind him as many devotees as any single Syracuse motion picture theatre entertainer ever had.

Hadden Has Great Way To Get Rid Of The Old Straw Hats

Here it is! J. S. Hadden's effectual but harmless manner of destroying those old straws that are so carefully placed away in a bag at the end of this season and thrown away at the beginning of next. Hadden's idea is said to have been welcomed with open arms by the housewives who patronize the Paramount Theatre in Joplin, Mo., of which house he is the manager.

Inasmuch as the straw hat season is universally over on Sept. 15, Hadden offered to let every man turning in his old straw a guest ticket to see the picture.

With police sanction, the straw lids were stacked in a no-parking space in front of theatre. Around the space provided for the hats was a special chicken wire pen and on this were art signs carrying copy, "Men Free—Your old straw hat is a ticket today. See Ruth Chatterton in ANYBODY'S WOMAN —Paramount—Sept. 14-17."

Nearly 300 hats were piled up in the "pen" with nearly every one bringing along one or more paid admissions. Eleven hat dealers co-operated in paying for 32 inches of newspaper space —outlining proposition and selling "Anybody's Woman." The merchants also ran new hat ads around theatre ad—thus filling up an entire page, of which the newspaper contributed a heading at top.

And that's what comes of getting a good idea. It may be a little too late for you to use this gag now, but there's nothing stopping you from filing it away until next season because it will always work. You can also use this stunt in connection with felts when the straw hat season starts again, but it's up to you. If you think it won't be effective as the other way, oke. We want to thank Mr. Hadden for this and let him know that if there are any more of these ideas on the way we'll hand the postman a plane to deliver them in. Which means, Mr. Hadden, that we'd like to hear from you again soon.

Perry Turned Out A Souvenir Program That Was Excellent

One of the highlights of the campaign turned out by Fred Perry, for the opening of the Riviera Theatre in Binghamton, N. Y., was the souvenir booklet.

The booklet was made up in twelve pages. Perry, who is promotion manager for the house, hustled about town and secured ads from all of the principal dealers. The ads paid for the cost of printing. The booklet was made up in black and white with special colors being used for the covers.

Besides carrying the ads, the pages were devoted to stories of the men who had built the theatre and would run it. In addition to this feature, stories were printed harping back to the old days of the movies. The current program was also carried. Taking it all in all, the job was well done, and Perry, who knows Binghamton as well as any man in the town, can well consider his work perfect. We want to thank Fred for passing this along to us, and as he is one of our active members we feel that the new season is going to be productive of many fine showman slants from up around his section of the country. What do you say, Fred, let's have it.

Kligler Is There When It Comes To Turning Out These

Adeptness in lobby display creations of unusual design may be easily said of Joseph W. Kligler, manager of the Daly Theatre in New York City. Whatever else Daly has on the ball, if it is as good as the stuff he turns out when making up lobby displays, he's a pennant winning team in himself.

When he played "Common Clay" he turned out what might perhaps be considered one of the finest pieces of work ever done along the lines of lobby display in the city, and when you take into consideration the fact that he is working at a neighborhood house, then the stunt's value is more than enhanced. Looking at the photo closely you can see the giant cut-out of Justice—painted by Kligler himself—holding a sword balancing, in the scale, the featured players. At the foot of Justice, a miniature jury box may be seen with miniature figures of jurors, cut out of compo board, listening to the defense being quizzed by the prosecuting attorney. In her arms she holds the baby, silent symbol around whom the story revolves. The defense attorney and the court clerk sit in their respective places. A banner under the railing that separates spectators from participants in courtroom episodes sold the picture with effective copy.

Kligler has given you a real line on what can be done if you'll just take the time to do it in. And even if you find that you're pretty busy what's to hinder you from laying out what you want and having your house artist carry it out. Dope out this photo and we are sure that you'll pick up a couple of more slants to add to your showmanship. Thanks, Joe.

Moss-Covered Lobby Of Carolina Was Novel Attraction

In this case, the rolling stone couldn't gather any moss in Charlotte, N. C., due to the fact that E. E. Whitaker, manager of the Caroline Theatre, seemed to have gathered it all in his lobby to use as a plug for "Let's Go Native."

A shelf-like moss display was built out over the regular banner frame with cut-outs of Jeanette MacDonald underneath. In fact, the box-office, front of lobby and walls were covered with moss interspersed with special art heads, stills and copy about the picture. The moss display was decidedly different from anything that had been used in sometime, and certainly proved an effective medium in advertising the picture.

The only complaint that we have about the whole affair is that we haven't a photograph, but we hope Whitaker will remedy this when he turns out another novel display or any other showman gag, and at the same time he'll send us in a photo of himself. What say, "E. E."?

Elliott Johnson Is Clicking at the Saenger in Hope

Knowing that the first thing he had to do when he took over the management of the Saenger Theatre in Hope, Ark., was to sell himself to the town via the house, Elliott Johnson set out to do it.

In the program that is sent out through the mailing list he injected a few novelties that served to acquaint the town with him and the new season attractions coming to the house. One of the messages was along a personal letter angle in which he stressed the importance of not missing any of the pictures, told also about the innovations that the theatre had, and, at the same time, informed the readers that on certain days designated by an asterisk, special prices would be in effect. The asterisk was placed along side of the features, which were on the opposite page.

This angle proved one of the best bets that Johnson could have used for an opener and it is a certainty that it secured plenty of publicity for him. We hope that now he is settled down in the house he is going to prove a very active member. How about it, Elliott? Keep us posted, will you, so that we can let the rest of the show world in on what you are doing to sell shows at the Saenger.

Amateur Critic Gag Went Over Well For Terhune And Slater

Working with Terhune at the Strand Theatre in Plainfield, New Jersey, Bill Slater is enabled to turn out some good gags in conjunction with the show-selling that goes on in the town.

Though only in the town a short time, he has been doing some nice work, his latest contribution to the showman encyclopedia being an Amateur Critics' Contest, held in conjunction with the local newspaper, that he passes along to us. The newspaper, a very conservative one, hearkened to Slater's proposition that they co-operate with him in the running of comments from the residents on the value of the picture current at the Strand.

A notice was inserted in the paper to the effect that all interested were invited to participate in the contest and shoot in their review of the picture. The stunt caught on very well, and letters in the neighborhood of two hundred were received very week. The rave stories were not always chosen, either. Slater saw to it that only well written and intelligent reviews were selected, and strictly on their own merits; if they panned the picture, fine—if they didn't, also oke. In this manner he proved that the stunt was a bona-fide one, and this helped to boost up the weekly batch of correspondence.

Here's one that you, too, can work to good advantage. You can offer a set of tickets for the three best reviews printed weekly. Pick the reviews from different sections of your town. Or present the kid, youth, and adult angle, by printing three different reviews. There are lots of possibilities in a stunt of this sort and it will be of value to you to look into them. Thanks, Bill, for letting us have this one and remember we want to be kept posted on what you are doing.

Football Nite!

Following up our recent suggestions on the value of football tie-ups in your theatre, we want to call particular attention to the "Football Nite" idea which clicked so marvelously last fall in many spots throughout the country.

The gag is to invite the local high school football team as the theatre's guests on a designated night. Surround the stunt with plenty of publicity, dress your ushers in football togs, decorate the front and lobby appropriately and get as many civic leaders as possible to co-operate.

If feasible, have the team brought to the theatre via a parade in which they ride in autos furnished by the local Packard or Cadillac distributors. The school band can also be worked into the idea both for their value in the parade as well as to play some selections and school songs in the theatre.

This idea is as broad as your ability to capitalize on it. A hundred side angles will surely present themselves as you go along working out the campaign, but it will all be brought to a climax with smashing b.o. returns and everybody rooting for the team.

We set forth the details of how Manager W. A. Roberts in Plymouth, Pa., successfully executed a stunt of this kind. If you must have help refer back to the story, dig up the issue of March 1st.

Members taking advantage of this suggestion and putting some sort of Football Nite over in their theatres will confer a favor by sending us all the details, photos, etc., so that others may benefit by their experience.

Scholer Handed Out Insurance Policies to Combat Laughing

A bona fide insurance policy was one of the features that J. J. Scholer, manager of the Orpheum Theatre in Phoenix, Ariz., handed to his patrons when he played "Animal Crackers."

The insurance policy was secured through the agent of the Hartford Accident and Indemnity Co., through which a public liability was issued insuring the patron against possible injury resulting from laughing.

The inside pages of the four-page leaflet was devoted to the policy: " In consideration of the premium stipulated herein, the company hereby agrees with the insured—ORPHEUM THEATRE—that if, during the term of this policy, ANY PERSON OR PERSONS other than the employees of the insured shall sustain any physical injuries caused by HYSTERICAL LAUGHTER while viewing THE 4 MARX BROTHERS in ANIMAL CRACKERS for which injury the insured is liable for damages, then the company will indemnify the insured against losses arising out of such liability up to an amount not in excess of ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS in respect to any one performance."

The front and back pages were identical in make-up, being devoted to copy about the insurance company and the picture, theatre and play dates. The insurance policy was obtained free.

A tie-up was made with Merchant's Biscuit Co., whereby they furnished 5,000 glassine envelopes with two animal crackers in each one. The envelopes carried copy, "You will eat up ANIMAL CRACKERS—name of theatre, and play dates." These packages of animal crackers were distributed at the theatre in advance and at the schools.

The two stunts were just what the film needed to get them talking about it, and before the box-office opened they were lined up and ready to lay down the dough. Thanks, "J. J." Give us some more.

Edward Hart Still Giving Newburgh Fine Showmanship

"Say it with music" was the theme song of a couple of ballyhoos that Edward Hart, manager of the Academy Theatre in Newburgh, N. Y., used to sell his attraction to the residents.

One of the ballyhoos consisted of a group of 12 colored boys of the local colored fife and drum corps. These musicians were planted behind a 24-sheet special cut-out mounted on a large truck. The truck then visited the suburban towns where he drew lots of attention.

Hart also picked up two straggling street musicians—a violin and an accordion. They were engaged to play for three days in front of the theatre as well as being used on a small truck behind a special six-sheet cut-out.

Both musical ballyhoos attended the city community outing where 20,000 people were in attendance. Both ballyhoos got lots of attention and helped the picture immeasurably.

He also arranged for a two-day and two-night showing of living models in one of the window shops in town. These model showings took place in advance of playdate. The girls wore sport and bathing attire to attract one of the largest crowds ever to gather for such an event in the city. The window also had a generous supply of advertising matter playing up the title of picture, cast, theatre and playdates.

From the way things look, it appears to us that Newburgh must be 100% Round Table, and if that is the case we hope that Mr. Hart will send us in his photo so that we can make it a hundred per cent that way, too.

Kunze Kiddie Klub Is One Of Biggest Assets Theatre Has

Perhaps one of the most prosperous of the many kiddie clubs, inaugurated by showmen throughout the country, is that run by Paul W. Kunze, manager of the State Theatre in Stoughton, Mass.

First started as a medium for boosting the kiddie business at the theatre, it rapidly developed into one of the strongest attractions that the theatre has ever had.

The kids, when they assembled at the weekly meetings, would display whatever talent they possessed. Kunze was amazed to find that the kids were exceptionally versatile. Word-of-mouth comment began to float around town that the theatre had a winner that looked to become something sensational.

About the second meeting of the kiddie club, Natalie Tolman, whose picture we are showing here, was called in as "Big Sister" to act as sponsor and chaperon of the kiddies. Unusually gifted herself, possessing a working knowledge of dramatics, and well skilled in handling kids, having graduated from a school of kindergarten training, she immediately won over the youngsters; and without hesitation they spent many hours rehearsing under "Big Sister's" direction, until they were fully capable of appearing on any stage in the country. The weeks drifted by and finally the kids were set. Everyone in Stoughton, and the vicinity for miles around, had been talking about the kids and marvelling at their Saturday matinee performances, but they were entirely unprepared for the surprise that Kunze had been secretly preparing for them. Then he broke with the announcement! The kids were to make a weekly appearance on the radio.

What a sensation that radio appearance turned out to be! Letters began to pour in the day after the first broadcast and they still continue to come in by the hundreds. The Kiddie Club is known all over the state, and it is also said to be talked about in other parts of New England. Its membership of 1,000 youngsters is perhaps the largest enrollment of its kind in the country. The local newspapers and the merchants are solidly behind it. One of the newspapers, commenting editorially, states: ". . . What a fine idea! One of the best advertisements for our town is to give the outside world something worthwhile from our town and community. By these broadcasts, Stoughton will again be on the map. The country will know that the old town is alive, to say nothing of the service that 'Big Sister,' through the theatre, is rendering to the Kiddie Club and its members."

This "Big Sister," Natalie Tolman, and she seems to be giving Kunze quite a run for showmanship honors. To her should go a vote of thanks for the tireless energy she has devoted to accomplishing her project and from a "little acorn" in the form of a hundred or so kids, has grown a "big oak" of hundreds of them. But Paul was behind it!

The showmanship that Kunze has been displaying at the State in Stoughton has netted him reams and reams of publicity, plenty of good-will, and business that is of the highest. In view of the fact that he has made such a success of his kiddie club, we feel that it will act as an incentive to those showmen who may also be featuring them, and that they, too, will climb into the top positions held by Kunze, Jack Marpole, Matt Press, Dave Himmelhoch and the many other active showmen who are reporting "All's Well" on their kiddie business.

Lou Smith Stepping Along At The Stone In Brooklyn, N. Y.

Already, Lou Smith is bowling them over. This showman who is well known because of his activities at the Windsor Theatre, when he handled the house in Brooklyn, N. Y., is now working at the Stone Theatre, and, as we said, on his first week he started to bowl 'em over.

The Fox circuit is running a popularity contest in all of the Brooklyn and Long Island houses, and every manager in Sam Rinzler's division is doing some fast stepping to put it over. The photo will give you some idea of what Lou is doing to keep them interested in the stunt which runs for about a month. He has the lobby looking like a flower garden, and a close scrutiny of the picture, will reveal the rubber plants that have attracted a lot attention. These, as well as the other flowers, were promoted from one of the local florists, and what we want to say is that it is certainly a feather in any showman's cap when he can get stuff from merchants when he has been at the theatre but a short time.

We have a hunch that Lou is going to be up among the leaders when the final results of the popularity contest are read off. Listen, Lou! We want to hear lots from you, even though we know that you are going to be very busy putting the house across. Keep us posted on your work, so that we can pass it along to your fellow members and let them in on the slants you employ.

Atmospheric Lobby To Sell Western Was Effective Medium

Just to show that he is still on the go when it comes to putting pep into his work, L. P. Weaver, manager of the Rialto Theatre in Phoenix, Ariz., spent considerable time and effort in turning out an atmospheric lobby for a western he was playing.

Old-time guns, saddles, cowboy outfits and stuffed wild animals were displayed on each side of the foyer. In back of this display was a fence—giving the effect of a corral. Hay was also used on the floor—adding to the effect of its effectiveness.

Art work was spotted throughout the lobby display—plugging the picture and featuring Zane Grey, Jack Holt, Richard Arlen and Fay Wray. This lobby display caused considerable attention and aroused lots of interest for the picture. The kids gave it a big play, too, hanging around the guns and saddles for quite some time. In fact it was often necessary to chase them away. They seemed determined to wear out the display by looking at it.

Oke, "L. P." And we'd like to say that we hope you are going to keep us supplied on your other showman activities, too.

"All For One And One For All"

Benefits!

A number of requests have come into Club headquarters asking us to pass along a few of the ways in which showmen run benefits at their houses.

Running through back numbers of the Round Table Club, we find that some showmen let out their houses to the local organizations on a 50-50 basis for all tickets sold on the outside, the box-office sale going to the theatre. The split, at times, varies, depending upon the organization. It is sometimes, in cases of charity, 60-40, the major portion going to the locals.

Another method that we find is popular with showmen is that of selling the house and help outright, the cost, of course, including a fair evening's profit for the theatre. In the case of overtime for stage hands, operators, etc.—should the lessee be running a stage show or special attraction—is paid by the organization, a contract being entered into regarding this phase.

We hope that the above will prove of benefit to the members who have requested the information. If any of you have any other views on the subject, let's have them and we'll pass them along.

Archibald And His Colleagues Giving Town Showmanship

Though the Strand Theatre in Pocatello, Idaho, has been opened but a short while, the showmen taking care of the house are seeing that it is in on every sort of stunt it can be pushed in for. And in order to let us see what they are doing now, R. E. Archibald, manager of the Orpheum, gives us a look at a double truck ad used recently.

When the Strand played "With Byrd at the South Pole," it was thought that a two-page spread would do much toward putting the film across. Accordingly a number of the town's leading merchants were visited and they consented to come in on the proposition. You will note in the ad that it does not carry a contest or anything else to boost it, so we feel that the men who made it up must know the town pretty well, and be sure that it is going to be read.

The mats inserted in the ads of the dealers helped to pep up the pages considerably. A number of persons commented on the ad, as it has very seldom been pulled in Pocatello, with the result that word-of-mouth spread. And this didn't displease the merchants any. In fact, they liked the ad so much that they expressed a desire to run another at a future date. And knowing that the showmen in Pocatello know their stuff, we hardly have to say that it is going to be taken advantage of to the fullest extent.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

THE BIG PARADE OF NEW MEMBERS STILL CONTINUES!

J. S. HADDEN manages the Paramount Theatre in Joplin, Mo. From the account we have on hand of Mr. Hadden's work, we managed to dope out that he is right there with the goods. Keep your eye on the Club pages and see the methods that "J. S." uses to bring them up to the box-office of the Paramount. And if he'll send us a photo of himself, we'll introduce him on the regular pages. What do you say, "J. S."?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

RAYMOND PUCKETT is the District Publicity Manager for Publix working the New Jersey houses. He is associated with "Bunny" Bryan the regional chairman, so if you don't recall seeing Ray's name before, you can know that he has some of his stuff in with the showmanship that Bunny turns out. We are glad to welcome him into the Club and we know that he is going to continue his activity. How about your photo, Ray, and a little dope?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

FRANCIS FALKENBURG is the Assistant Manager of the Olympia Theatre in Miami, Fla. As many members know, the Olympia is handled by that up-to-the-minute showman, James H. McKoy, so it is small wonder that Falkenburg is turning out some good work. We are sure that if he continues it, he will more than merit a house of his own in a short time. Keep us posted on your work, Francis.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

GEORGE H. DUMOND is the managing director of the Jersey City Theatre in Jersey City, New Jersey. The house features a policy of pictures and presentation. In view of this fact we know that it takes a showman who is well versed in the game to run it. Holding the position, Mr. Dumond must fill all qualifications. Give us a photo and some dope on your career in the business, George ,so that we can give you a regular introduction.

NOW MEET THESE SHOWMEN!

ALBERT HANSEN is the Assistant Manager of the Fox West Coast Theatre in San Bernardino, Cal., and he comes to the Club well recommended by his manager, Mr. Miller, who is known in all of the show circles of the Coast. All that you have to do now, Albert, is to live up to the send-off that you have received and you'll be handling your own house and selling your own shows before long.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

J. L. MULHALL manages the Grand Theatre in Lancaster, Pa. This town has been pretty well known for showmanship in the past, and we think that if Mr. Mulhall knows about its rep he is trying to keep it up where it belongs. Let's have the low-down on your show-selling, "J. L.," and you might also include your photo with it.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

RUSSELL B. TERHUNE is the manager of the Strand Theatre in Plainfield, New Jersey. The house plays a straight week policy, so you can figure that for a theatre to feature a policy of that type in a suburban town there must be some showmanship displayed to keep the house filled. And we happen to know that business is good, because we became acquainted with the record Terhune has made for himself as a showman. Keep it up, Russell.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

ROBERT L. JONASSON manages the Mayfair Theatre in Asbury Park, N. J., right in the heart of the resort district. And that makes it plenty hard for Mr. Jonasson to sell his shows. But still he does it, and the way he does it will no doubt be seen in future issues of the Club pages when he passes along some dope on his activity. Include your photo with it, too, Bob.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

FRANK J. BYRNE is the manager of the Victoria Theatre in New York City. In his years in the showgame Mr. Byrne has effected some nice showmanship, and we are glad to know that he is continuing it at the Victoria. Welcome into the Club, Frank. And listen, drop us a line or two and include your photo with it so that we can let the rest of the Club meet you.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

STANLEY E. GOSNELL manages the Valencia Theatre in Baltimore, Maryland. He is located in a city that permits the employing of some exploitation angles that are the kind which build up the box-office, so he should be kept pretty busy. However, we are sure that he will find time to sit down and drop us a line or two concerning himself, and also include his photo.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

WILLIAM R. FISHER is the assistant manager of the Columbia Theatre in Washington, D. C. As we number a great many showmen from his town we are sure that Mr. Fisher must be getting a lot of experience from seeing how they work. Keep us posted on what you are doing, William, so that we can report your progress.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

N. EDWARD BECK is the manager of the Georgia Theatre in Atlanta, Ga., and as past issues of the Club pages have proven, he is no slouch when it comes to selling shows. He really needs no introduction on these pages, as his work has introduced him before. However, Eddie, everyone must come through these portals sooner or later. So that's that; and we hope you will continue your activity.

PAUL J. RHODES manages the State Theatre in Hanover, Penn. We recall having been through Mr. Rhodes'. town some time ago when we were looking over a string of houses in his state and while we don't remember at the time what showman possibilities it offered, we know that Mr. Rhodes will keep us in touch with it by his activity. Are we right, Paul?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

A. H. COHN is the manager of the Corby Theatre in Omaha, Nebraska. There is a great deal of showmanship being displayed around Mr. Corby's vicinity and we hope that he is right in the middle of it because it will furnish us with some interesting material that we can pass along on the Club pages. And when you send in your contribution, "A. H.," give us a little dope on yourself, too.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

WALTER D. McDOWELL manages the Loews and United Artists Theatres in Louisville, Ky. Mr. McDowell has been in the show game for a number of years and he is more than qualified to put over the house. In view of the fact that a lot of high pressure showmanship is being displayed down around his district, we look forward to hearing from him soon, setting forth what is being done to keep them coming up to the box-office. And we hope to find your picture in with it, too, Walter.
